 The Original Charters marked L. in the Tabula, viz., Nos. 8, 27, 31, 41, 81, 126, and 128, are in the possession of the Editor; those marked M., viz., Nos. 16, 19, 22, 73, 76, 80, 84, 99, 122, 123, 137, 144, 146, 150, and 154, were in the hands of Mr. A. Macdonald at the time of his decease. It is a singular fact, that these charters, marked L. and M., were obtained out of the great mass of rubbish thrown into the public streets when the cellars of the Laigh Parliament House were cleared out upwards of forty years ago. Many others must, at the same time, have been destroyed.

HISTORICAL NOTICES

OF THE

COLLEGIATE CHURCH OF ST. GILES, EDINBURGH.

The Church of St. Giles, prior to the era of the Reformation, although surpassed in wealth and architectural splendour by some other religious establishments in Edinburgh, has more than a local interest attached to its history. A collection of the earlier charters connected with this Metropolitan Church, which has now existed for upwards of seven centuries, could not therefore fail to form a suitable addition to the several Chartularies already printed for the Bannatyne Club. The materials for such a volume were indeed somewhat scanty and dispersed, but there fortunately exists a Register of such deeds, commenced in the year 1368, and partially continued for upwards of a century. This Register, which is a square folio of thirty-eight leaves of vellum, written at different times and by different hands, is in the possession of the Right Honourable Lord Panmure, by whom the use of it was most liberally granted. Such original charters as are now preserved in the Archives of the City of Edinburgh were communicated with equal liberality by the Lord Provost and Magistrates, who, at the same time, permitted free access to their Records for the purpose of elucidating the history of the Church. The collection has been further enlarged with charters in the possession of private individuals, and with such as are incorporated in some contemporary Protocol books, or in the Great Seal Register. The whole of these charters have been arranged in chronological order, and those prior to the year 1400, and such others as seemed of more than special interest, are given without abridgment. While grateful thanks are due to the several parties who have contributed the use of the necessary materials for this work, it is but proper to add, that the details of preparing the transcripts for the press, of abridging the more recent charters, revising the text, and forming the index, have been assigned to Mr. James B. Brichan, the editor of the latter portion of the Origines Parochiales Scotiæ.

The History of Edinburgh is very obscure until we reach the times of David the First, in the twelfth century. That a parish church of small dimensions may have existed nearly coeval with the Castle and town, and long antecedent to existing records, is at least highly probable. Symeon of Durham, who flourished in the early part of the thirteenth century, under the year 854 includes Edinburgh in reckoning the churches and towns belonging to the Bishopric of Lindisfarne or Holy Island, in the district of Northumbria; and this See, previously to the Scoto-Saxon period, extended over the ample range of Lothian as well as the more southern districts of North Britain. This reference is generally considered as applicable to the Church of St. Cuthbert under the Castle; but it is to be remarked, that St. Cuthbert's was always a distinct Church and Parish, and formed no part of Edinburgh, and the name "Edwinesburch"[1] must therefore have had a special reference to the Castle and town. It was, however, only when Malcolm the Second, King of Scotland, about the year 1020 obtained the cession of Lothian from the Saxon Earl Eadulf, that this district, with an increasing population, became of importance, and it has ever since remained a part of the kingdom of Scotland: the ecclesiastical jurisdiction afterwards continued to be exercised by the Bishop of St. Andrews, and the assumed dependency upon the See of York was constantly and most resolutely opposed by the Scottish Church.

The Abbey, founded by David the First, in honour of the Holy Cross, and the Virgin Mary, and all the Saints, was commenced in the year 1128. In the great Charter, which may be dated about the year 1145, the King, for the support of this foundation for Canons Regular of the rule of St. Augustin, bestowed the Church of the Castle, the Church of St. Cuthbert under the Castle wall, the Chapels of Corstorphin, Liberton, and various lands, chiefly in the vicinity of Edinburgh. Had there been a parish church of equal importance with that of St. Cuthbert's, it might be supposed that it would have been mentioned with the other churches named in this Foundation Charter. Yet we find that in connexion with the parish church there was at that period a farm to the south of Edinburgh, which, from its being the grange of the Vicar of St. Giles's Church, was called St. Giles's Grange. It was conferred by David the First on the monks of Holm Cultram.[1] The name of the Grange in that locality is still retained. Under the date of 1243, we find the name of a Perpetual Vicar of the Church of St. Giles, Edinburgh; this circumstance, along with the earlier reference to its Grange, suggests that the church must have been attached to some religious house, and like the Priory of Coldingham, it might for a time have remained subordinate to Lindisfarne. It therefore seems the most reasonable conjecture, that the parish church dedicated in honour of St. Egidius or St. Giles, and which has ever since retained the name of the patron saint, was erected during the reign of Alexander the First (1107-1124), the founder of the Abbey of Scone, and several other religious houses. Edinburgh at least was a place of sufficient importance in his brother David the First's reign (1124-1153) to be reckoned one of the Quatuor Burgorum Principalium, as a judicatory for commercial matters.[2] The other boroughs were Stirling, Roxburgh, and Berwick; and their enactments form the earliest existing collected body of the Laws of Scotland.[3]

existed within the recollection of persons still alive, being a richly ornamented Norman porch, which had formed the entrance to the nave on the north side of the church. Fortunately, before its removal in the year 1797 or 1798, a representation of it was taken and etched by an Edinburgh artist, of which a careful fac-simile has been engraved as a frontispiece to this volume.[1] The archivolt, it will be seen, was in several divisions, exhibiting figures of animals and grotesque heads, along with crenelated and chevron mouldings. Such doorways were often preserved, when every other part of the church was rebuilt.[2] Had it still existed, it would have formed the most interesting specimen of early architecture in this part of the country. The prevalence of Norman remains among such of the ancient parish churches of the Lothians as still retain any of their original masonry, proves that a very general impulse had been given to ecclesiastical architecture about the period when the Abbey of Holyrood was founded in the twelfth century.[3] In confirmation of this remark, it might be sufficient to mention the existing churches of Kirkliston and Dalmeny, and the older portions of that of Duddingstone.

In the ancient Taxation of ecclesiastical benefices, preserved in several of the chartularies, without date, but evidently belonging to the thirteenth century, as the rule by which the Scottish clergy were to be assessed by the Church of Rome, the Ecclesia Sancti Egidii de Edinburgh was placed in the Deanery of Linlithgow, and rated at the annual value of twenty-six merks. This comparatively small assessment may be accounted for by the parish not extending beyond the boundaries of the town; the amount being only one merk more than the adjoining parishes of Duddingstone and Restalrig, but not one-third of that of Lasswade, or one-sixth of St. Cuthbert's (sub Castro) under the Castle. The vicinity of the Abbey of Holyrood

[1] This engraving is without name or date, and is now very rare. I recollect being told, a great many years ago, that the artist's name was Armour, and that he was the son of a shopkeeper near the Royal Exchange. In the Edinburgh Directory for 1800-1801, I find the address of "John Armour, drawing-master, Milne's Square," no doubt the person referred to. He appears to have left Scotland, as we find recorded among the deaths (Scots Magazine for July 1805 of 30th April, "At Heywood Hall, St. Mary's, Jamaica, by a stroke from the tongue of a wain, while it was loading with sugars, Mr. John Armour, son of Mr. John Armour, merchant in Edinburgh." His father, who became an auctioneer, but was still described as merchant, Fountainbridge, died in 1810.

may have likewise been the cause why the borough of Edinburgh was not constituted the seat of an Archdeacon. In the Taxation of 1275, known as Bagimont or Bayamond's Roll, St. Giles is rated at xvj li.[1] This sum nearly coincides with another taxation of Ecclesiastical benefices for Papal tenths within the southern district of Scotland, preserved among the Records of Durham, in a roll of the early part of Edward the First, in which the Ecclesia Sancti Egidii is estimated, verus valor, at vj li. xiij s. iiij d., and Vicaria ejusdem at x li.; the Decima respectivelybeing xiij s. iiij d. and xx s.[2]

This ancient Church of St. Giles, consisting of a nave and chancel, with small side aisles, may have either been rebuilt, retaining the ornamented porch, or only been completed in the course of the thirteenth century. Notwithstanding the ravages committed by the invading forces of England, and the successive alterations and improvements, not less destructive, it can scarcely be said ever to have been wholly demolished, although its Norman character gradually disappeared as the church was enlarged, and numerous chapels and aisles were added, thus including the work of many different periods; but no part of the architecture now indicates an earlier date than the latter part of the thirteenth century. As usual in all large churches, it presented internally the form of a cross, with the central tower placed at the junction of the nave and choir, with transepts and aisles both south and north.

During the minority of David the Second, the infant heir of King Robert the First, who died in 1329, Edinburgh was exposed to constant depredations in the contests with England and the adherents of Edward Balliol. That the parish church did not escape the ravages of the English invaders is stated by some of our older historians. The Chartulary of St. Giles, now printed, in fact commences with an exordium, dated on the Tuesday following the feast of St. Michael the Archangel (29th September) 1368, to this effect:—That the Aldermen and Bailies of Edinburgh, taking into consideration how, from the ravages of war, the mortality of man, and the ignorance of youth, many bequests to their Church of St. Giles, and the altars endowed therein by burgesses, had been abstracted or misapplied, to the diminution of Divine worship, they, with the consent and assent of the rest of the burgesses, appointed John Rollo, Common Clerk of the community, to insert in this book, in the form of a Register, the annual rents belonging to the church, and its several altars within the same, with copies of the charters of foundation, as contained in the list subjoined. This resolution was only partially carried into effect, as instead of "the many bequests," the list mentioned only specifies ten charters, of dates between 1346 and 1363, and no deeds of an earlier date have been preserved.

In the spring of 1383, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, came to Edinburgh, but restrained his forces from sacking or destroying the town, the citizens having, according to Wyntoun, saved it by ransom. In the subsequent invasion, the English army under Richard the Second, in 1385, again took possession of Edinburgh, but after they had occupied the town for five days, it was committed to the flames. All our old historians concur in stating that while the Abbey of Holyrood escaped at this time, St. Giles's Church was involved in the general conflagration of the town. Thus Andrew of Wyntoun, in his Metrical Chronicle, says that the English forces, after burning the Abbeys of Melrose and Dryburgh,

> Of Edinburgh the Kyrk bryntthai,
> And wald have dune swa that Abbay,
> But the Duke, for his curtasy, . . .
> Gert it that time sawfyd be.[1]

In like manner, Walter Bower, the continuator of the Scotichronicon,[2] states expressly, "Ac nobilem villam de Edinburgh, cum Ecclesia Sancti Ægidii

[1] Orygynale Chronicle, &c., vol. ii. p. 330.

[2] Lib. xiv. cap. 50, vol. ii. p. 401.—Bishop Lesley, in mentioning the destruction of Edinburgh at this time, says emphatically, "Atque (ut odii in homines, sic impietatis in Deum monumentum ibi defigeret sempiternum) S. Ægidii templum sævissimo absumpsit incendio."—De Rebus gestis Scotorum, p. 262. Romæ, 1578, 4to. There can be no doubt that the injuries which several of these religious edifices suffered during English invasions were never fully repaired.

EJUSDEM voraci flamma incineravit." In tracing the history of the Church of St. Giles, three epochs are thus distinctly marked. The first is that to which we have referred, when it was of limited extent and size; and the roof and other portions being probably of timber, were consumed, while the decorated Norman porch, with the massive stone piers and arches of the nave and of the chancel, may have only been partially injured, and not wholly destroyed like the wooden houses, thatched with straw, of which, according to Froissart's description, the town chiefly consisted.

An original document of the period is fortunately preserved, and serves to illustrate the actual state and progressive enlargement of the Church of St. Giles in what may be called the second epoch of its history. It is the contract between the Provost and community of Edinburgh on the one part, and John Prymros, John of Scone, and John Skuyer, masons, on the other part, by which they engage to erect five vaulted chapels on the south side of the parish church of Edinburgh, from the west gavel, lying "in rayndoun" (signifying, probably, in a straight line) eastward to the great pillar of the steeple, in the same style of masonry as the vault above St. Stephen's altar, erected on the north side of the parish kirk of the Abbey of Holyrood. Four of these chapels were each to have a window of three lights; and the fifth chapel was to have a door equal to, or corresponding with, the west door of the church. The contract is in the following terms:—

"THIS Endentur made at Edynburgh the xxix day of the moneth of Nouember, betwene worthy men and nobyl Adam Forstar lorde of Nethir Lebertoun, Androw Yutsoun Prowest of the burgh of Edynburgh and the Communite of that ylke on the ta half, and Jonne Prymros Jonne of Scone and Jonne Skuyer masounys on the tothir half, berys wytnes in fourme the qwylk eftir folowys · That is for to say · At the forsaidys Jonne Jonne and Jonne, al as ane, and ane as all, sal mak and voute fyve Chapellis on the south syde of the Paryce Kyrc of Edynburgh, fra the west gavyl lyand in rayndoun est on to the grete pyler of the stepyl, voutyt on the maner and the masounry as the voute abovyn Sant Stevinys auter standand on the north syde of the parys auter of the Abbay of the Halyrudehous, the qwhylk patronne they haf sene · Alsua tha ylk men sal mak in ylk Chapel of the four a wyndow with thre lychtys in fourme masonnelyke, the qwhilk patrone thai haf sene, and the fyfte chapel woutyt with a durre als gude maner as the durre standand in the west gavyl of the forsaid Kyrk · Alsua the chapel and the ylys qwhare the auterys sal stand, sal be voutyt all vndir a maner as it is befor spokyn · Alsua the forsayde fyve Chapellys sal be thekyt abovyn with stane and water thycht the buteras fynyt wp als

An important fact may be deduced from the above contract, as it is evident from these stipulations that the nave of the church, extending to the pillars of the great steeple, was entire, and had escaped the effects of the conflagration in the year 1385.

This contract, dated 29th November 1387, which presents one of the earliest specimens of Scottish prose now extant,[1] is peculiarly interesting in connexion with ecclesiastical architecture. The sum stipulated to be paid to the masons was 600 merks of sterlings of the payment, or money, of Scotland; and on the back of the contract[2] is the acknowledgment of the builders having received, in 1390, twelve score pounds sterling, and, in August 1391, a further payment of ninety-two pounds, leaving a balance of the stipulated sum as still due of £268. The work was evidently still in progress; but whether the sums paid to John Prymros, one of the masons, in 1399 and 1402, recorded among the miscellaneous notices at the end of the chartulary, formed part of the first contract, must be left to conjecture. An examination of the form of the groining clearly indicates that the outer walls of both the south and north aisles of the original church had been taken down and rebuilt, and new vaulted roofs substituted. At this period, the

[1] Maitland has printed this contract, but not with much accuracy. He refers to a previous contract in the year 1380, "between the Provost of Edinburgh and divers masons to vault or arch over a certain part of the said church;" but no evidence has been found of any such deed having ever existed.—History of Edinburgh, p. 270.

nave had no clere-story, which, as it now exists in the western portion of the building, is a modern addition, of lathe and plaster, in imitation of stone.

In the plan of the church, these chapels are marked b 1 to 5, and the porch or door, a. In recent times this vaulted porch, with its richly groined ceiling, served as the south entrance to the Tolbooth Church; and over it was a small chamber, lighted by an oriel window, the corbel of which was an angel holding the city arms. This apartment, from its contiguity to the Council Chambers, was long used as a charter-room, and immediately above it was another small room or closet, having some old-fashioned oak cabinets, also filled with a mass of deeds, papers, and city records. Its entrance latterly was from the pulpit-stair within the church. It was originally the Revestry, or room for holding the vestments of the clergy, but being no longer required for such a purpose, it was employed, by order of the Council, for "keeping of their Evidentis buikis," &c. This was in April 1563.[1] But this porch and chamber, as well as the two chapels marked b 4 and b 5, without the least regard to old associations or to picturesque effect, and although in perfect preservation, after a lapse of more than four centuries, were most ruthlessly sacrificed in order to obtain the tame formality of the present exterior.

King Robert the Third, in consequence of the injury which the church sustained in 1385, may have been led by public grants to aid in its restoration and enlargement. In the Chamberlain Rolls, between the years 1390 and 1398, various annual sums are allocated, conceduntur per Regem ad fabricam Ecclesie Beati Egidii de Edinburgh. During the minority and captivity of James the First in England, the same record exhibits similar grants between 1409 and 1413, ex donacione Domini Gubernatoris (Robert Duke of Albany), ad fabricam Ecclesie parochialis burgi de Edinburgh.[2]

It thus appears that the Church of St. Giles, like almost every large fabric of the kind, was a work continued for many generations, and enlarged by public as well as private contributions. At a somewhat later period than the five chapels commenced in 1387, a similar range of small chapels on the north side were erected, two on each side of the old Norman porch. The two western chapels still remain with a light and elegant clustered pillar, from the capital of which spring the ribs of the groined roof, and the arches that divide it from the adjoining aisle. The accompanying woodcut gives a view of this part of the church, being one of the few portions which were allowed to remain almost untouched; but forming part of the north gallery of the church now called West St. Giles, it was not thought necessary to encumber the sketch with the gallery and under-pews, or to represent the barbarous manner in which the bases of the pillars have been hewn away.

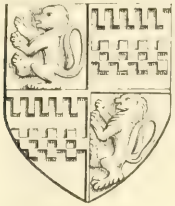
In the ground-plan of the church, the above centre pillar, marked q, is called the Albany pillar, from having on its capital two shields of arms. The shield on the south side of the pillar, contains the armorial bearing of

Robert, Duke of Albany, the second son of King Robert the Second; the other, on the north side, of Archibald, fourth Earl of Douglas.[1]



Duke of Albany.

Earl of Douglas.

An incident related by Bower in his Scotichronicon, under the year 1416, seems to indicate that the building of the church was completed, so far as the design of that time extended. "Hoc etiam anno par avium ciconiarum venerunt in Scotiam, et super ecclesiam S. Ægidii de Edinburgh nidificabant, et per unam ratam anni ibi morabantur;"[2] but with some simplicity it is added, "sed quo postea avolaverunt nescitur." It needs scarcely be remarked, that storks were not likely to build their nests on a church where masons were still at work. It is highly probable that a small Lady Chapel may have existed at the east end of the church, but been removed when the building was enlarged.

The third period of the history of the church may be dated from the middle of the fifteenth century, when the choir had been enlarged and completed, by extending the building eastward in its present form. At the same time the roof was raised, and the clere-story windows added. That it was thus enlarged appears not only from the more ornate style of the building, but from the appearance of the walls, marking distinctly the older portions, and also from the heraldic devices and armorial bearings still existing. Thus it is evident that while the pillars nearest to the centre are plain octagons, with arches corresponding in simplicity, those at the east end have decorated capitals supporting moulded arches. There is a change also in the groining of the aisles, and the spaces between the pier-arches are enlarged.[3] The King's pillar, as it is called, is the first from the window on the north side, and near the spot where stood the High Altar. On the foliated capital are four coats of arms, two of which, the second and third, are here represented.

Of these armorial bearings, the first has the lion within the double tressure, and is usually supposed to be those of King James the Second (1436-1460); the second, impaled, of his Queen, Mary of Gueldres (1449-1463). In both these shields a blank space occurs, the upper part being apparently left unfinished, but as this form elsewhere occurs, it may perhaps have some heraldic signification. The third, as above, has also the lion within the double tressure, but having a label of three points, which is held to denote a prince or heir, if not a younger son. The fourth shield has three fleurs-de-lys, for France.

On the opposite pillar, on the south side of the High Altar, are also four coats of arms, viz., those of the town of Edinburgh, and of the families of Kennedy, Otterburn, and Preston.

To commemorate other benefactors, on the demi-pillar, on the north side of the eastern window, we have the arms, three cranes gorged, of Thomas Cranstoun, a burgess, and chief magistrate of Edinburgh in 1439, and again in 1454; and on the south side, those of Napier of Merchiston, also Provost of the City in 1457, on the Lennox shield, a saltire engrailed, cantoned with four rosettes, which the Napier family assumed before the middle of the fifteenth century.[1] But a circumstance occurred which led to the proposed erection of the Preston Aisle, on the south side of the church, in the year 1454.

In noticing this erection, we may briefly advert to the Saint who, from some unexplained cause, was chosen by the burgesses of Edinburgh as their tutelar Saint. St. Egidius, or Giles, an Abbot who flourished towards the end of the seventh century, according to the recognised authorities in such matters, was an Athenian by birth, and of noble extraction. His extraordinary piety and learning drew the admiration of the world upon him in such a manner, that it was impossible for him to enjoy in his own country that obscurity and retirement which were the chief object of his desires on earth.[2] Having sailed for France, he spent many years in the wild deserts near the mouth of the Rhone, and afterwards in a forest in the diocese of Nismes. The Bollandists[1] have shown that this district belonged to the French towards the beginning of the eighth century, when St. Giles died, and that his body remained there till the thirteenth century, "when, the Albigenses being very troublesome in that country, it was thought proper to remove it to Toulouse, where it is still kept in St. Saturnius' Church. . . . His name occurs on the 1st of September in the Calendars of the English Church, before the Reformation; that, and two ancient churches in London, are a sufficient proof of his being known and honoured by our devout ancestors."[2] The parish church of Elgin was also dedicated to St. Giles.[3] One of the few existing Seals of our Collegiate Church (see the accurate engraving at the end of these Notices) represents, under a canopy supported by spiral columns, a full length figure of St. Giles with the nimbus, holding the crozier in his right hand, and in his left a book and branch. A hound, his usual attendant, is playfully leaping up to his hand. But the circumstance to which we referred, as having led to the further enlargement of the church was connected with a relique of the Patron Saint.

[1] In a short article by the late Alexander Deuchar, genealogist, in the Scots Magazine, New Series, June 1818, p. 538, and in later works, some of these armorial bearings are assigned rather hastily to other names, such as Isobel, Countess of Lennox, who died in 1451; Cranstoun, Scutifer Regis, in the reign of James the Third; Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews; and Nicolson. Had it been intended for Bishop Kennedy, the shield (see opposite page) would no doubt have had a mitre.

In the Charter dated 11th of January 1454-5 (printed as No. 77, p. 106), it is narrated, that William Preston of Gourtoun, then deceased, and interred in the Lady Aisle, had, with diligent labour and great expense, and, aided by a high and mighty prince the King of France, and many other Lords of France, succeeded in obtaining possession of the arm-bone of St. Giles; and that this inestimable relique had been freely bequeathed by him "to oure mothir Kirk of Sant Gele of Edynburgh withoutyn ony condicion." The Provost, Bailies, and Community of Edinburgh, deeply impressed with the importance of such an acquisition, voluntarily undertook to com-

In chapter 11, entitled, "Sacri Corporis translationes et reliquiæ," we find notices of the head and various relics of St. Giles, including a part of his arm, which was brought from France to Prague in the year 1356; but no mention is made of his arm-bone, which found its way to Scotland in the following century.

[3] In the year 1390, Stewart, Earl of Buchan known as the Wolf of Badenoch, in his depredations burnt the town of Elgin, the Church of St. Giles, the cathedral church, &c.—(Shaw's Province of Moray, p. 276.) Elgin was a parsonage dedicated to St. Giles, and was the Bishop's pastoral charge. The High Church of Elgin, dedicated to St. Giles, is described as having stood on two rows of massy pillars, vaulted and covered with thick and heavy hewed stone. On Sunday the 22d June 1679, when the people had returned from worship in the forenoon, the whole fabric fell down, except the central pillars and steeple. The rebuilding was finished in 1684, as detailed by Shaw.—(Ib. p. 65.)

mence within one year, and to complete in the space of six or seven years, an aisle "furth fra our Lady isle, quhair the said William lyis," to erect there his monument with a brass tablet, with his arms, and an inscription, specifying his having brought that relique to Scotland; his arms also to be put in hewn stone in three other parts of the aisle; also an altar, and to endow a chaplain to sing for him from that time forth, and granting to his nearest relations the privilege of carrying the relique in all public processions. The monument with its brass tablet has long since disappeared; but the original charter was deposited several years ago in the General Register House, by Alexander Maconochie Welwood, Esq., one of the contributors of this volume, and one of the nearest relations of the Preston family now alive; his uncle, the late Sir Robert Preston, of Valleyfield, Baronet, being the lineal descendant from Preston of Gorton mentioned in the charter. An accurate facsimile of this curious deed is here inserted. The fate of the Relique itself will be afterwards noticed. The Preston Aisle, subsequently known as the Assembly Aisle, is marked E on the ground-plan; and it will be observed that the groined roof corresponds with that of the chancel, marked A, which, as already stated, was raised at the time when the building was extended eastward. The annexed cut of the Preston arms is copied from one of the central bosses of the ribs of the groined ceiling.

On the other central bosses are the City arms, and a shield, 1st and 4th a bend, 2d and 3d a cheveron, which represent the armorial bearing of Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, quartered with the arms of Vaux, Lords of Dirleton, by the marriage of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Halis, with the co-heiress of that ancient family. Patrick Lord Halis was Lord Provost in 1487.

It may have been to aid in discharging this obligation, that the Provost and Council, in the year 1462, when they passed a Statute regarding the mode of selling victual and timber, brought by strangers to the port of Leith, enacted, that "any person who brekis this Statute sall pay to the Kirk Wark of St. Geill, ilk persoun singularlie be himself, ane chalder of quheit, but remissioun." In like manner, a previous enactment in 1438 may have had some reference to the enlargement of the church. But in the present remodelled state of the building, we have no sure means of assigning the several divisions to their respective dates. Such work proceeded slowly, the number of persons employed was limited, and the ornamental parts and mouldings were usually executed by the Master Mason himself. We can therefore only offer as a probable conjecture, that the same workmen who extended the chancel, and added the clere-story the whole length from the pillars of the central tower to the east end of the choir, were employed in completing the Preston Aisle. All this was accomplished, we may suppose, prior to the year 1475, when the parish church had been converted into a collegiate foundation.

To the same period also may be assigned the Steeple or Airy Lantern, formed by cross ribs, in the shape of a crown (although this in part was probably of a later date), which, from its elevated position, rising in bold relief against the sky, near the centre of the long line of buildings of the old town, covering the ridge from the Castle to the Netherbow Port, was always a conspicuous and picturesque feature in any view of the town.[1] An admirable representation of the Tower and Lantern is given in Billings's Baronial and Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Scotland, vol. ii. His technical or professional description may be quoted:—

"The general plan of the church is a cross, the lantern-tower springing from the meeting of the arms. Continuous with the extremity of the nave is an additional transept with a flat roof. The main transept has aisles, and the southern branch has projecting edifices on either side, which give it in itself the form of a cross. . . . This species of lantern, formed by cross ribs, as in groined arching, seems to be peculiar to the north of Britain. It does not occur further south than Newcastle, while in Scotland, we find it still remaining in King's College, Aberdeen, and the Tron Steeple in Glasgow; until lately it existed in Linlithgow, and formerly terminated the Tower of Haddington. Of all the Scottish instances, St. Giles is at once the richest and lightest. The others had merely been formed by crossed arches springing from the corbels of the tower. That of St. Giles has an octagonal character, from two arches springing from the centres of the wall-plates. Along the intermediate spaces there is a parapet, pierced with quatrefoils, having a flowered moulding at the projection, and cusps on the upper edge. The outer edges of the arches are adorned with crocketed pinnacles, and supported by the general keystone, there springs from the centre of a clustre of small pinnacles, rising tier over tier, a graceful spire. The whole plan exhibits those capricious irregularities so frequently to be found in the finest specimens of Gothic work."

To the same period we may refer the great bell of St. Giles, which must have been heard far and near on special occasions; as when, after news arriving of the disastrous field of Floddon, the inhabitants were ordered, at the tolling of the common bell, to assemble in military array for the defence of the city. This bell was cast in Flanders, and is described having the arms of Guelderland upon different parts, together with figures of the Virgin and child, and other devices, and had the following inscription :—" HONORABILES VIRI BURGENSES VILLÆ DE EDINBURCH IN SCOTIA HANC CAMPANAM FIERI FECERUNT ANNO DNI. M.CCCC.LVV. [1460?] JOHS. ET WILHELMUS HOERHEN ME FECERUNT; IPSAMQUE CAMPANAM GYELIS VOCARI VOLUERUNT. DEFUNCTOS PLANGO: VIVOS VOCO: FULMINA FRANGO."[1]

[1] It might be thought that this was the St. Mary Bell, sold with the brazen pillars in the church, in 1563; but there were other bells besides these two. In the Gentleman and Lady's Weekly Magazine, Dec. 7, Edinburgh, 1774, p. 319, in giving the above inscription, it is stated: "Some time ago, the great bell of St. Giles's Church having suffered damage, it was found necessary to take it down, and put up one of the Abbey Church bells in its place. As we apprehend many of our curious readers may be desirous to know the inscription which surrounds this ancient bell, we have, for their satisfaction, taken a copy of it. (As above.) . . . The arms of Guelderland appear upon different parts of the bell, together with pictures of the Virgin Mary with a child in her arms, and several other devices."

In a satirical poem of the reign of James the Fourth, a Dwarf is introduced saying to the burgesses of Edinburgh,

> I come amang you heir to dwell:
> Fra sound of Sanct Gelis bell
> Nevir think I to fle.[1]

From the Council Records towards the close of the fifteenth century, and the early part of the sixteenth, we learn that various fines were still directed to be appropriated to the Kirk wark of St. Giles, including the reparation of altars. Thus in the Seal of Cause granted to the Incorporation of Fleschers, 11th of April 1488, certain penalties were to be exacted, two parts to be raised by the town's officers "to the kirk wark," and the third part by the deacon of their craft, to the reparation of their own altar within the church. But there is one contract of the Provost and Council in the year 1491, which is worthy of special notice. This curious document, which contains regulations for the hours of attendance of the Master Mason, and his colleagues and servants, hitherto unnoticed, is as follows:—

"STATUTUM PENES REGIMEN MAGISTRI LATIMI ECCLESIE COLLEGIATE BEATI EGIDII BURGI DE EDINBURGH.

"The quhilk day the Prouest, Dene of Gild, Baillies and Counsale of the burch of Edinburgh thinkis expedient and als ordanis that thair Maister Masoun and the laif of his collegs and seruandis of their Kirk wark that now ar and sal happin to be for the tym sall diligentlie fulfill and keip thair seruice at all tymes and houris as after followis: that is to say—The said maister and his seruandis sall begyn to their werk ilk day in somer at the straik of v houris in the morning, and to continew besylie into thair lawbour quhill viii houris thairafter and than to pas to their disione, and to remane thairat half ane hour, and till enter agane to thair lawbouris at half hour to ix houris before none, and swa to wirk thairat quhill that xi houris be strikkin, and afternone to forgather agane to thair wark at the hour of ane, and than to remayne quhill iiii houris afternone, and than to gett a recreatioun in the common luge be the space of half ane hour, and fra thinefurth to abyde at thair lawbour continually quhill the hour of vii be strikkin: And in winter to begyn with day licht in the morning, kepand the houris abovewritten, and to haif bot thair noneschanks allanerly afternone, and to remayne quhill day licht be gane. [2] Extracts (by Alexander Guthrie, about 1580) from the Council Records of Edinburgh, MS. Advocates Library, (31:4:9) fol. ii. The original Records of this date are not preserved.

These regulations do not furnish us with the name of the Master Mason, but a previous entry, supposed to belong to the year 1484, may perhaps supply the omission; as Alexander Gray "was then chosen and sworne Maister of the werk to the towne for this yeir to cum, for quhilk he sall haif xx^{ti} mark of fie." That some extensive operations were in progress when these regulations were enacted, seems beyond doubt. So far as can now be ascertained, the latest additions to the church may have included an extension of the south transept, and the erection of the two aisles or chapels on each side, marked g and d on the ground-plan. The latter was connected with the south wall of the chapels of 1387 marked b 1 and b 2, and had a groined roof, which was fully as rich as any portion of the choir. This was the chapel referred to in the Charter of Confirmation of a mortification by Sir Alexander Lauder of Blyth, Provost of Edinburgh, to an altarage of St. Giles's Kirk, dated 17th of August 1513, by which he founded "a chaplainry in the New Chapel, near the south-western corner of the church, in honour of God, the Virgin Mary, and Gabriel the Archangel." It consisted of two arches, extending between the south porch of 1387, and the south transept; and in the interior of the wall, between the two windows, an altar-tomb was constructed under a deep recess, on which a recumbent figure had no doubt been originally placed.[1] On each side of the centre ornament, at the top, but placed against the wall, there appears like heraldic supporters, the lion rampant and the dragon.

The Church of St. Giles stood in the centre of the town, having the Via Regia or High Street on the north, and an open space towards the south, beyond the churchyard, which was afterwards converted to the same purpose. But the church, from an early period, was blocked up by successive erections, originating in the circumscribed limits of the town within its walls. The "buith raw" was a range of houses running parallel on the north side of the church; and the magistrates derived an annual revenue from the booths and shops erected against the walls of the church. Dunbar, the Scottish poet, about the year 1500, when he remonstrates with the merchants of Edinburgh, for allowing the public streets to be so crowded and filthy, says,—

[1] Wilson's Memorials of Edinburgh, vol. ii. p. 166. This altar-tomb is traditionally called the Caithness monument. From the insignia, the crown of thorns, the nails, &c., it may have been the aisle and altar of Christ crucified.

> Your stinkand Style, that standis dirk,
> Haldis the lycht fra YOUR PARROCHE KIRK ;
> Your foirstairs makis your houses mirk
> Lyk na contray bot heir at hame :
> Think ye not schame,
> Sa little polesie to wirk
> In hurt and sklander of your name?[1]

The covered passage which so long retained its appropriate name of the "Stinking Style," in the "Booth Row," or Luckenbooths,[2] served as a communication between the north side of the church, and the part of the principal street called the Lawnmarket. At the north-east corner there were steps leading to the entrance of the church, called "Our Lady's Steps," from the image of the Virgin, placed in a niche of the outer wall.[3] Near the same spot stood the City Cross. It was removed and rebuilt somewhat lower down the High Street in the year 1617.[4] In a letter to Cardinal Wolsey from Dr. Magnus, 26th of November 1524, an account is given of the Earl of Angus, with a numerous retinue, forcing his way into Edinburgh, and "at thair cummying to the Crosse, beside Sanct Giles Church, they did proclamations to be made," &c.[5]

The place which is now called the Parliament Close was anciently the churchyard of St. Giles, being the common cemetery of the town, as usual attached to the parish church. The Provost's house, with its garden or glebe, was on the east side ; the houses of the prebendaries and ministers were on the west side ; and the declivity on the south side, afterwards familiarly known as "the Back Stairs," became the lower churchyard, at the foot of which stood the chapel of the Holy Rood, in which Walter Chepman, as we shall have occasion to notice, founded a chaplainry. In an Act of Parliament, 18th of October 1439, mention is made of a tenement belonging to the King, described as "jacens in burgo nostro de Edinburgh, situatum ad portam orientalem Cimeterii parochialis Ecclesie Beati Egidii ejusdem burgi."[1] This cemetery, as we have stated, was afterwards enlarged. On the 14th of January 1477-8, William Forbes, Provost of St. Giles, with consent of the Chapter, considering the necessity of providing for the interment of his parishioners, granted to the said church that portion of his garden which was contiguous to his manse, to the south of the church.[2] On the penult of July 1496, the same dignitary made a further grant of the north part of his manse and glebe, for extending the cemetery of the said church.[3]

[3] Sir George Mackenzie, in his Observations on Acts of Parliament, &c. (p. 31. Edinb., 1686, folio), supposes that this name was given in compliment to the wife of the Earl of Arran, Lord Chancellor of 1584 : but these Steps were so named before that lady was born.

We have unfortunately no trustworthy views of St. Giles's Church, or of Edinburgh, of an early date. Some of these are either bird's-eye views hastily sketched, or ideal representations to correspond with printed descriptions. Of the first class, is the sketch apparently made in the year 1547,[4] in which, as here copied, the church is merely indicated, without any attempt at correctness of detail. Of the latter, is the slight woodcut which appeared in 1550, to illustrate the description of Edinburgh, by Alexander Alesius, in Sebastian Munster's work, Cosmographia Universalis, repeatedly published in German and French, as well as Latin; and we may add the more imposing view, as if taken from an actual survey, in Braun's Civitates Orbis Terrarum, a work which also passed through many editions in the same languages, between 1572 and 1618. In the curious woodcut representing the siege of the Castle in the year 1573, which illustrates the first edition of Holinshed's Chronicle, we have a nearer approach to an actual glimpse of the church, with its open space sloping down towards the Cowgate. The object intended in the view itself was evidently to point out the position where pieces of artillery were placed during this memorable siege; and the High Street, in particular, is most incorrectly drawn.

The survey of Edinburgh, drawn by James Gordon, minister of Rothiemay, in 1647, and engraved in Holland, is of great importance as the earliest correct plan of the city; and that portion of it showing St. Giles, and the projecting tops of the Parliament House, then erected, is here added. A considerable part of the ground to the south of the church was then occupied by these new buildings; and the steeple and roof of the church had recently been restored. We could have wished that Gordon had devoted more of his time to delineations of the ecclesiastical buildings as they existed in his time, with the same fidelity that characterizes the four views of public buildings in Edinburgh, which were also engraved in Holland, from his drawings.[1] Views of a later date are too common or well known to require any notice in this place.

Having thus attempted, in this general description, to trace the progress of the building as it existed prior to the Reformation, our attention may now be turned to the internal affairs of the church, by presenting some notices of its Dignitaries and chief Benefactors, interspersed with occasional references to such public events as in some measure were connected with its history.

Previously to its erection into a Collegiate establishment, the Church of St. Giles was under the parochial charge of a Perpetual Vicar. Mention has already been made of the grant by David the First of St. Giles's Grange to the Monks of Holm Cultram, or Holm, an Abbey of Cistercians in Cumberland, about twelve miles distant from Carlisle, which is said to have been founded by Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, eldest son of King David, 3d kalends of January 1150.[1] The first official of the church whose name is to be found in public records, was JOHANNES ECCLESIÆ SANCTI EGIDII DE EDINBURGH PERPETUUS VICARIUS. He appears with Baldred, Dean of Lothian, as a witness to a Papal deed, in the reign of Alexander the Second, and the first year of the Pontificate of Innocent IV.; which fixes the date to the year 1243.[2] We also find, in charters under the year 1247, MAGISTER ALEXANDER DE EDINBURGH,[3] and in 1268, ROBERTUS DE EDINBURGH, Canon of Glasgow,[4] one or other of whom may perhaps have been his successor as Vicar. This designation of Vicar, and the donation of the grange or place in which the great tithes were usually stored, clearly denote that the church itself must for a time have been attached to some religious house or monastery.

The Parish Church of Edinburgh was occasionally used for holding national Councils, and other solemn meetings. In the year 1293, a General Council was held in full consistory, in pleno consistorio, within the Church of St. Giles.[5] Four years later, on Sunday before the feast of St. Thomas in 1297, Doneca, daughter of John, son of Herveus, resigned certain lands to the Convent of Holyrood, in full consistory, held in the Church of St. Giles.[6]

In a charter granted by Sir David de Grahame to the Hospital of Soltra, MASTER ALEXANDER OF RECLYNETOUN, Perpetual Vicar of Edinburgh, appears as a witness.[7] This was probably in the reign of Robert the First (1306-1329), as the charter was granted when Symon de Wedale was Abbot of Holyrood, and Symon occurs as Abbot on the vigil of St. Barnabas the Apostle in 1326.[8] church, the earliest benefactors recorded belong to the middle of the fourteenth century. Among these were Mathias, son of Juliana, burgess, in the year 1345; Henry Multerer, of his lands of Grothill, in 1350, confirmed in 1362 by his son, Robert Multerer; John of Allyncrum, William Hare, Roger Hog, and other burgesses of Edinburgh. Some earlier grants may be included in the rental of the several altars;[1] but as the charters have not been preserved, the dates cannot be ascertained. In 1362, David the Second confirms the grants of the lands of Over Merchiston, of Railtoun or Ravelstoun, and of Craigcruik, granted by William More, Lord of Abyrcorn,[2] Sir Patrick de Grahame of Kynpunt, and Sir David de Graham of Doundaff, and others. In one of these charters, dated in 1362-3, we find the name of Dominus Bricius, Perpetual Vicar of Edinburgh.

In the year 1384, the Scottish Barons met in St. Giles's Church. This circumstance is stated by Froissart, who says that "the Earl of Douglas, the Earl Muref, and other knightes and squyers of Scotland, helde a secret con sayle togyther in the churche of Edinborowe; when the said knights and barons of Scotland, and they of France, made an appointment to invade the realme of England, without the knowledge of the King of Scottes, who was at Edenborowe."[3] In prosecution of this enterprise, they overran Northumberland, and committed great devastations, which in the following year were amply repaid when, as already stated, St. Giles's Church suffered in the conflagration by which a great part of the town was destroyed.

In the year 1393 Mr. James Lyoun was Vicar of St. Giles. After the Scottish Church had renounced the pretended jurisdiction of the Archbishops of York, the patronage of various churches in the district of Lothian probably remained vested in the King; and Robert the Third, on the 15th of December in that year, in consideration of the expenses incurred by the Monastery of Scone, from its being close to the seat of Government, and thus exposed to great charges in entertaining assemblages of nobles at the time of [1] This rental was commenced in the year 1368, and is printed at pages 275-284.

[2] In the Registrum de Passelet, there is a Composition or Agreement regarding some disputes between the Abbot of Paisley and Sir William More, which was concluded at Edinburgh, in the Chapel of St. Catharine within the Church of St. Giles de Edinburgh, dated 24th of April 1373.

his coronation, and on other occasions, when met for the transaction of urgent business, conferred the right of patronage of the Church of St. Giles, and every other right which he or his predecessors had in the said church, on that monastery. This grant was confirmed by Walter Traill, Bishop, and the Chapter of St. Andrews, on the 3d of May 1395; by which union it was appointed that when Mr. James Lyoun the Vicar of St. Giles shall have ceased, by death or otherwise, to hold the benefice, the canons of the monastery should enter on possession of the church, keep it in repair, and supply it with ecclesiastical services. In the same year two Papal Bulls of Benedict XIII. confirmed the arrangement by which the Church of St. Giles became a dependency on Scone. Although we do not meet with the name of any Vicar of the church for nearly half a century, the Canons of Scone no doubt fulfilled their obligations.

Among other important transactions of which the Church of St. Giles was the scene, it is recorded that in the year 1440, the Lord Chancellor Crichton, and Sir Thomas Livingstone, Regent during the minority of James the Second, met there to deliberate as to the custody of the King's person. It also continued during the fifteenth century to receive many valuable endowments from ecclesiastics of distinction as well as burgesses; in particular, the names may be specified of John Cameron, Bishop of Glasgow, and Chancellor of Scotland; Thomas of Cranstoun, burgess of Edinburgh, his wife Mariot, and his son William of Cranstoun; the Forresters of Corstorphine; John Gray, Rector of Kirkliston; John Laing, King's Treasurer, Bishop of Glasgow, and Chancellor; Thomas of Lauder, Master of the Hospital of Soltra and Bishop of Dunkeld; James Livingstone, Bishop of Dunkeld and Chancellor; Robert Logan of Restalrig; Archibald Napier of Merchiston; and John Otterburn, Official of Lothian and Archdeacon of Galloway. Had all the charters and deeds of foundation been recorded, we should no doubt have met with the names of other distinguished benefactors, and ascertained the precise dates or the occasion on which some of the chapels or aisles were erected.

John Methven, Doctor of the Canon Law, is the next Vicar of Edinburgh of whom we find any record. Like many of the beneficed clergy of that period, he filled successively several important offices. He was educated at St. Andrews, and from the records of the University it appears that Dominus Johannes de Methven became a Bachelor of Arts in 1430, and a Master of Arts in 1431. In 1437, his name occurs as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Lynclouden. In 1449, he is styled Doctor of Decrees, and was Master of the Rolls and Clerk Register. In the Parliament held 29th January 1449-50, the Vicar of Edinburgh, without having his name specified, was appointed one of twelve persons of distinction who were chosen to examine and report on all Acts of Parliament and of General Council.[1] In the following year, on the 5th of July, Dr. Methven is expressly called Vicar of Edinburgh;[2] and on the 21st of May 1454, a safe-conduct was granted to John Methven, Doctor of Decrees, and Vicar of Edinburgh, with twelve persons, to pass through England and proceed to Calais.[3] Whether a new nomination was occasioned by his death or resignation is uncertain, but we find

Nicholas de Ottirburn styled Vicar of Edinburgh, on the 8th of June 1455,[4] in the safe-conduct granted to George Bishop of Brechin, William Earl of Orkney, and others. He also was a person much employed in public affairs, and had completed his studies at St. Andrews, being one of the Determinants in 1419, and a Licentiate either in 1420 or 1421. In an indenture of Archibald of Douglas, who assumed the title of Earl of Murrave or Murray in virtue of his marriage, he pronounces a judgment in his official capacity on the 26th of August 1447, in which he is designated "Nicholaus de Ottirburn, Magister in Artibus, Licentiatus in Decretis, Canonicus Ecclesiæ Glasguensis, ac Officialis Curiæ Sancti Andreæ."[5] In letters of safe-conduct, 13th July 1459, he is again styled Vicar of Edinburgh, and also Clerk Register and Clerk of the Rolls.[6] He died on the last day of January 1461-2, as we learn from the obituary preserved in the Glasgow Chartulary.[1] His nephew, John de Otterburn, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Methven, Canon of Glasgow, and Official of St. Andrews within the Archdeaconry of Lothian, founded commemorative services or prayers for his soul, at Glasgow in 1468,[2] and at Edinburgh in St. Giles's Church in 1478.[3]

William Forbes, Canon of Aberdeen, was the next incumbent as Vicar of St. Giles, and his name appears in a deed of the year 1464. During his time the parish church, in its decorated style of architecture, had assumed its enlarged and completed form. A large number of altars, more or less richly endowed, had been founded within distinct chapels, by the piety and munificence of persons of various ranks; not less than thirty separate altars being indicated in the following charters; and the enlargement of the fabric affords a satisfactory proof of a desire to adapt the church to the religious wants of the increasing population. King James the Third, at the request of the magistrates and community of Edinburgh, in a charter under the Great Seal, dated the 28th of October 1466, granted his consent for the erection of St. Giles's Church into a Collegiate institution;[4] but a delay of some years would seem to have occurred in carrying this intention into effect. The death, a few months previously, of James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews, who had held the Commendatory of Scone, and is supposed to have been a benefactor to the Church of St. Giles, may have contributed to this delay. The charters of erection and confirmation are not preserved; but Patrick Graham, his successor, who, during his visit to Rome, had obtained the erection of the See of St. Andrews into an Archbishopric, must have confirmed the Royal charter and procured the Papal consent to the erection of St. Giles into a Collegiate Church, before he fell under the King's displeasure, and ended his days in captivity. In charters dated the 25th of February 1467-8, 20th of September 1470, and 6th of July 1471, the church still continued to be designated Ecclesia parochialis Beati Ægidii. But in a charter which was discovered after the printing of the text, and which is subjoined, with some other additions, in the Appendix to these Notices, it is under the date of October 1475, called THE COLLEGE KIRK OF ST. GEILL of Edinburgh, and by this name it is invariably designated in deeds of a subsequent date. The Chapter consisted of a Provost, Curate, sixteen Prebendaries, a minister of the Choir, four Choristers, a Sacristan, and a Beadle. The revenues of the altars and chaplainries in this church were appropriated for the support of the several officers in the new establishment. To the King was reserved the nomination of the Dean or Provost, who was to enjoy the tithes and other revenues of St. Giles's Church, with the adjacent manse; and the Provost had the right of choosing a Curate, who was to have a yearly allowance of 25 marks, with a house adjoining.

It might be supposed from the distinct and explicit statements given by Maitland,[1] that he must have had the original deed of erection before him. It has not, however, been discovered in the Archives of the City, nor is it recorded in the Register of the Great Seal. He may, indeed, have obtained his information from some later document in which the particular revenues assigned to each of the priests were recapitulated; but his statement is so minute and apparently accurate, that it may be transferred to these pages.

"ST. GILES'S CHURCH, from its first settlement, till the year 1466, appears to have been only a common Parish Church. But the Edinburghers at this time, by virtue of a grant from King James III., converted the same into a Collegiate Church, and established their new erection on the old foundation of altarages or chaplainries, which shows them to have been pretty numerous, as will appear by their several names, which were as follows[2]:—St. Andrew's, St. John the Evangelist's, St. Michael the Arch-angel's, St. Salvators, St. Michael de Monte Tomba's, the Holy Trinity, the Holy Cross, the Holy Blood, St. John the Baptist, St. Nicholas, St. Duthac, Sancte Crucis de Lucano, St. Sebastian, the High Altar, Nostre Domine, St. Gabriel the Arch-angel, St. Ninian, St. Katharine, St. Gregory, St. Barbara, St. Blase, St. Dionysius, St. Francis, St. Eloye, St. Martin and St. Thomas, St. Roch and St. Nicholas, the Holy Blood and St. Anthony, Our Lady of Piety, St. James, St. Lawrence, St. Mungo, St. Thomas the Martyr, the Holy Cross of the Body and Blood of Christ, and St. Crispin and St. Crispinianus. Many of the above altars had a plurality of foundations and chaplains belonging to them; whereat were performed the numerous anniversary Obits, &c. for the repose of the souls of the founders, their relations and friends.

"This Collegiate foundation consisted of a provost, curate, sixteen prebendaries, a sacristane, bedall, minister of the choir, and four choiristers.

"The Provost, for his maintenance and support of his dignity, was to receive the fruits, rents, and profits, together with the adjacent manse, or parsonage-house, and glebe belonging to the church, with the right of chusing a Curate, to whom he was to allow the sum of twenty-five marks yearly, with a house near the church, to dwell in. The Curate, in the provost's absence, was to officiate in his stead, to preside in the choir in the absence of the two senior prebendaries, and not to be removed but by an act of the Provost and Chapter.

"The second prebendary had a stipend of forty marks yearly, arising from his prebend of Ray[l]stoun.

"The revenue of the third was twenty-nine marks per annum, out of his prebend of Craigcruck.

"The profits of the fourth, from his prebend of Marchiston, amounted to twenty marks yearly.

"The fifth, from his prebend of Grotall, fifteen marks, and an annuity of seven marks in Edinburgh.

"The sixth, from his prebend of St. Andrews, and the profits belonging to the chaplainry of St. Andrews in the Church of St. Giles.

"The seventh received the revenue of his prebend of St. Michael, in the said Church of St. Giles.

"The eighth, the produce of his prebend of St. Michael de Monte Tomba in the Church of St. Giles.

"The ninth received that part of the income of his prebend of the Holy Cross, arising from the benefactions of John White and Stephen Robertoun, amounting to thirty marks yearly.

"The tenth had that part of the profits of his prebend of St. Salvator, of thirty marks per annum, founded by John Stury and Stephen Robertoun, at the Altar of the Holy Cross in this church.

"The eleventh, from his prebend of St. John the Baptist, the foundation of John Peblis, and Sir William Preston, the sum of twenty-seven marks yearly.

"The twelfth had the profits of his prebend of St. Nicholas, amounting to sixteen marks yearly, together with four marks from the foundation of Thomas Ker, at the Altar of St. Duthac, in this church.

"The thirteenth received the produce of the prebend of Sancte Crucis de Lucano, amounting to sixteen marks yearly, and four marks annually out of the chaplainry of St. Duthac.

"The fourteenth had the profits of the prebend of St. Sebastian, with the surplusage of the income of the chaplainry at St. Duthac's Altar.

"The fifteenth received the revenue of his prebend of the Sacristan, which were the profits of the parish clerk's office, anciently due to the sacristan.

"The sixteenth had the produce of his prebend of Minister Chori, amounting to six marks per annum, with the small oblations at the lights at St. Marnock's, and to have a beddal under him.

"The four choiristers or singing boys, who were allowed by the Common Council, and admitted by the chapter, had an allowance of five commons each.

"The curate, prebendaries, sacristan, and minister, besides the stipends above mentioned, were allowed the profits of the chaplainries of Our Lord, founded by John Cookson, at the Altar of Nostre Domine, and that at the High Altar, by John Cliddisdale, which were divided amongst them.

"The sacristan, minister, and choiristers were presented by the Common Council; the prebendaries of Le Foure's foundation were collated by the Bishop; and the rest in the Town's Gift, and admission to the Chapter, by virtue of a grant from the King as aforesaid."

Mr. William Forbes, Perpetual Vicar, was advanced to the Provostship of the newly erected Collegiate Church. He was educated at St. Andrews, his name occurring among the Determinants in 1448, and of the Licentiates in 1451 in that University. In the year 1464, he was elected Rector.[1] After his appointment as Provost of St. Giles, Forbes obtained a charter under the Great Seal, dated 2d of October 1478,[2] confirming to him for life an annual pension or stipend of 220 marks, which had been granted by the Provost, Bailies, and Community of Edinburgh; and in an old inventory of the town's charters, &c., there is entered,—"Item, ane discharge granted be Mr. William Forbess, Provost of the Colledge Kirk of St. Geill, wherby he dischairges Thomas Yair, Thesaurer of Edinburgh, and Johne Quhythed, fermorer of the Kirk of Dunbarnie, the soume of ane hundreth and ten merkis for the Witsunday termes maill of the fermes of Dunbarnie." This discharge is dated the penult of September i^{m} iiij^{c} four scoir yeiris.[3]

But we find that two years later he was obliged to institute a suit in Parliament against the Magistrates for recovery of his stipend, amounting to xj^{xx} (eleven score or 220) marks. The Lords Auditors, on seeing the obligation of the Magistrates, with the King's confirmation, ordained them to pay the Provost's stipend on pain of imprisonment in Blackness Castle.[1] The name of Forbes, as Provost of St. Giles, appears so late as the year 1496, in the grant of part of his glebe for the enlargement of the cemetery; and he may have survived till the commencement of the sixteenth century, as there appears no intermediate person as Provost between himself and his successor, who afterwards became Bishop of Dunkeld, and holds a distinguished place in early Scottish literature. The following is a fac-simile of his signature in 1477-8.

Gawin Douglas, third son of Archibald, fifth Earl of Angus, by Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Lord Boyd, Lord High Chamberlain of Scotland, was the next Provost of St. Giles. He was born about the year 1474, and was educated for the Church. In the registers of the University of St. Andrews, his name occurs in the lists of Incorporati in 1489, of the Determinantes in 1492, and of the Licentiati, or Masters of Arts, in 1494.[2] With his high family connexions, it was not likely that Douglas would fail in securing preferment. We accordingly find that in 1496, he had a grant of the teinds of Monymusk in Aberdeenshire.[3] Two years later he obtained from the King a presentation to the parsonage of Glenquhom when it should become vacant by the resignation of Sir Alexander Symson.[4] He also became Parson of Lyntoun, and Rector of Hawch now known as Prestonkirk, in East Lothian; but the dates are uncertain. As the latter preferment has frequently been mistaken, a few explanatory words may be added. Sir John Ireland was parson of Halch in June 1493, when a suit was heard in Parliament regarding his right of pasturage on the moor of Preston.[5] In his dedication of the Vitæ Episcoporum Dunkeldensium to Bishop Douglas, Alexander Myln styles him Rector de Hauche. By mistaking the name, Bishops Sage and Keith call him Rector of Heriot, a parish about sixteen miles to the south of Edinburgh; while later writers supposed it signified Hawick in Teviotdale. But the true reading of the original MS. is Hawche; and in the earliest manuscript of his Virgil, he is expressly styled "Provost of Sanct Gylys Kyrk in Edinburgh, and Person of Lyntoun in Lothian."

In his allegorical poem, The Palice of Honour, written in the year 1501, Douglas concludes with a poetical address to King James the Fourth, in which, with what may be called false modesty, he refers to his own "vulgair ignorance," and says,

> Ressave this roustie rurall rebaldrie,
> Laikand cunning, fra thy pure leige unlaird.

It may at least be conjectured that when the Provostship of the church became vacant, this performance had some effect in inducing the King to bring the author from his rural occupations, and to advance him to a place of considerable dignity and emolument. The precise date of his appointment is uncertain, but we find from the Treasurer's Accounts, that the sum of nine shillings was paid on the 11th of March 1502-3, "to Sir John Ireland, Vicar of Perth, for writing off the citations and letters on MAISTER GAWIN DOUGLAS, PROWEST OF SANCT GELIS KIRK."[1] No deeds signed by him as Provost have been discovered, but several instances might be mentioned in which his name occurs as a witness with this designation.[2] In the minutes of the Lords of Council, Gawin, Provost of St. Giles's Church, is recorded as present in February and March 1504-5, and again in 1509. That his name does not occur in the minutes of the intermediate years may have been occasioned by his absence from the kingdom. In some proceedings before the Lords of Council, connected with his own advancement when nominated to the vacant See of St. Andrews, there appeared on the 6th of July 1515; "Maister Gawine Douglas, Postulate of Aberbrothok, and shew, how he was a man of forty years of age, and how he had passit his time in Scotland, England, France, and Rome, without defamation or any reprief to his honesty, as was known to divers of my Lordis thare present,"[1] &c. His translation of the Æneid of Virgil into Scottish verse, the work which has conferred so much lustre on his name, was the labour of eighteen months, and was completed, he informs us, on the 22d of July 1513, or seven weeks before the fatal battle of Floddon. He further states that it was undertaken at the request of his cousin, Henry Lord Sinclair,[2] whom he characterizes as "Father of books, protector of sciences and lare (or learning);" and his epistle, directed to this noble patron, begins,

> My Lord, to your nobilité in effect,
> To quham this wark I have above direct,
> GAWANE, your cousing, PROVEST OF SANCT GEILL,
> Greting in God, ay lesting in gud heill.

Archibald, Earl of Angus, at this time was Provost of Edinburgh. Hume of Godscroft relates his attempt to dissuade the Scottish monarch from that rash undertaking which entailed such calamitous effects upon the country. Among other friends and relations at Floddon, Douglas lost his two eldest brothers. On the last day of September 1513, we find from the Council Records of Edinburgh, that he was admitted a freeman of the city. The following is the brief minute,—"Ultimo Septembris j^{m} v^{c} xiij^{o} Archibald Dowglass, Erle of Angus, Provest. Ane Priest maid burgess. Magister Gavinus Dowglass, Prepositus Ecclesie Collegiate Beati Egidii hujusmodi burgi effectus est burgensis pro communi bono ville, gratis."[3] This might have been in compliment to his father, who only survived a few months these public disasters, but few more distinguished names have been enrolled in the list of our citizens than that of Gawin Douglas. On the 22d of October 1513, "the Provest of Sanct Gelis Kirk" occurs as one of the Lords of Council, three or four of whom were appointed to remain daily with the Queen Dowager to give her counsel and advice.[1] It would be out of place to enter into any minute details of his subsequent career. It is sufficient to state, that he was consecrated Bishop of Dunkeld in the year 1516;[2] and that he died of the plague at London in 1522, aged forty-eight,[3] and was interred in the Church of St. Savoy, in London, where the spot is still marked by a brass tablet.

During the reign of James the Fourth, various burgesses of Edinburgh became liberal benefactors to the Church of St. Giles, chiefly for the endowment of altars. Among these may be mentioned, besides William Forbes first Provost of the Collegiate Church, Walter Bertram, Provost of Edinburgh in 1481, and again in 1494; Walter Chepman of Ewerland, our Scottish Caxton; Richard Hopper; Sir Alexander Lauder, also Provost of the city for several years from 1501 to 1511; Richard Lawson of Hieriggs, and Janet Elphinstone, his spouse; Andrew Mowbray, apparently connected with the Mowbrays of Barnbougle; Archibald Napier of Edinkellie and Merchiston; Alexander Rynde, and Robert Vaus; while the incorporated trades seem to have vied with each other for the support and decoration of the altars of their patron saints. Among the persons we have named, CHEPMAN is particularly worthy of notice. He had been employed at the Court of Holyrood as clerk (clericus), and also as a merchant, from the early part of the King's reign. In the year 1507 he obtained letters of exclusive privilege for the establishment of a printing press.[4] He had a charter under the Great Seal, dated the 21st of August 1513;[1] endowing a secular priest to officiate continually at the Altar of St. John the Evangelist, in the chapel which he had recently founded (in capella ipsius per me noviter fundata) in the south part of the Church of St. Giles, for the welfare of the souls of the King, the Queen, and their offspring, as well as for himself and his relations. Within four weeks of the date of this charter, James the Fourth met his untimely fate at the field of Floddon. After the lapse of nearly fifteen years, Chepman gave a fresh proof of his attachment to the memory of his royal master, having in 1528, when far advanced in years, endowed another chaplainry at the Altar of Jesus Crucified, within the mortuary chapel of the Holy Cross situated in the lower part of the cemetery of St. Giles.[2] By this foundation, prayers were appointed specially to be offered for the souls of the King, the Nobles, and others slain at Floddon; for the souls of his present as well as former spouse; and for the souls of all the faithful of both sexes, buried or to be buried within the collegiate church or in the adjoining cemetery. The religious services thus prescribed ceased during the second generation, and the mortuary chapel was demolished;[3] but the charter itself has been preserved, with Chepman's signature and seal as follows:—

Walter Chepman died in the year 1532 or 1533. The position of the chapel or aisle within the church, which he had founded in 1513, and where he no doubt was interred, is ascertained by the circumstance that upon the death of John Earl of Athole, Lord High Chancellor, the Provost and Council, on the last of June 1579, "grantis and permittis that upon the west part of Walter Chepmanis Iyle, fornent the Erle of Murray's tombe (see letter g on the ground-plan) salbe brokin, and thair ane buriall place be maid for the Erle of Athole."[1] It may be added that, eighty years later, the mutilated remains of "the great" Marquess of Montrose were brought in solemn funeral procession, and buried in this, the south-east aisle of St. Giles's Church.[2]

Robert Crichton, who appears to have been the immediate successor of Bishop Douglas as Provost of St. Giles, must have been born towards the close of the fifteenth century. He was a younger son of Sir Patrick Crichton of Cranstoun Riddell, and nephew of George Crichton of Nauchton, who was Abbot of Holyrood (1516-1526) and Bishop of Dunkeld (1527-1544), and through whom he evidently obtained, at an early period of life, his preferment in the Church. He was educated at St. Andrews, where he was incorporated in the year 1512. To his name, Robertus Crichton, there is added, "Prepositus Edinburgi," by some later hand. In the list of Determinants or Bachelors of Arts, in Pædagogio, primus actus, in the year 1514, Robertus Crichton is marked dives, a distinction from the pauperes or poor students who paid no fees; and on the 23d May 1516, he was admitted a Licentiate. Before he had taken his Masters' degree, he was elected Parish Clerk of the Aisle and Altar of Holyrood, vacant by the decease of Patrick Bellenden.[3] The date of his actual preferment to St. Giles's Church is uncertain. In the Provost's absence, the Curate or first Prebendary acted as President, "for the guid rewle to be had in their College of Sanct Gele."[4] On the institution of a Prebend, 12th of June 1521, Magister Robertus Crichton is styled "Prepositus Ecclesiæ collegiatæ Beati Egidii de Edinburgh," but it is added, he was at that time absent, "nunc causa studii in remotis agentis."[5]

His resort abroad, at a later period at least, was rather to insure his own preferment, than to prosecute his studies. His uncle, George Crichton, Bishop of Dunkeld, died in 1543-4, and is said to have made a resignation of the See in Robert's favour, who proceeded to Rome for the purpose of urging his suit. But the interest of the Governor secured the appointment for his natural brother, John Hamilton, Abbot of Paisley, early in 1545; and proceedings by the Scottish Parliament were instituted in August 1546, against Mr. Robert Crichton, Provost of Sanct Gelis Kirk, for opposing the presentation of John Abbot of Paisley to the vacant See of Dunkeld, "as prejudicial to our Soverane Ladyis interest;"[1] and in a letter from Patrick Liddale, dated at Rome, 17th October 1546, it is stated that "Bonar (Bishop of London) laborit to get command fra the Pape to cause the bulles of Dunkeld be sped in favour of the Provost of St. Gelis Kyrk; because he could nocht cum speed thereof, he stopit [David Panter, Bishop of] Ross, be sinisteris informationis."[2] A vacancy having occurred at St. Andrews, in May 1546, Hamilton after a protracted interval of three years, was promoted to that See, and Crichton became his successor as Bishop of Dunkeld.[3] On the 17th March 1549-50, the Chapter of Dunkeld held a meeting sede vacante, but in the course of that year he was consecrated Bishop. He however seems still to have retained the Provostry of St. Giles, as he is so designated in charters dated in 1551, and the two following years.[4] But on these occasions, Lawrence Tod, as deputy, acted in his place, being styled Vicar, and President of the Church of St. Giles.[5]

James Chisholme was the last person who held the office of Provost of St. Giles, but the date of his appointment is uncertain. From some law proceedings in January 1566-7, instituted by James Chisholme,[6] Provost, Sir James Johnston, Vicar-Portioner, and eleven Prebendaries, to recover

He survived till February 1584-5 (ib. p. 113), when he could not be much less than ninety years of age. The practice of interments taking place within churches was prohibited by Acts of the General Assembly; but on the 26th of March 1585, the Provost and Town Council, in compliance with the King's mandate, granted permission to bury Crichton, Bishop of Dunkeld, within the kirk of this borough.—Council Register, vol. vii. fol. 172.

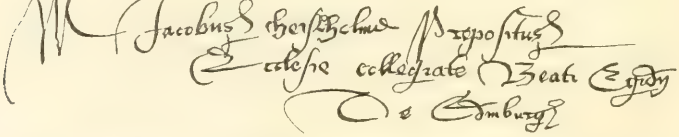
certain teinds of kirklands assigned to their use, it is stated that a lease for nineteen years had been granted by them to Laurence Lord Oliphant in June 1551. Notwithstanding the odium attached to the Reformers, there can be no doubt that great indulgence was shown to the Popish incumbents of Church livings in allowing them a certain proportion of the revenues during their lives, except in cases of such as had incurred the penalties of forfeiture for civil crimes. In the suit referred to, it was adjudged that the right to the annualrents belonged to the said Provost and Prebendaries, as the lawful superiors for the time being. Chisholme also continued in possession of the Provost's house and glebe, and the Prebendaries theirs in like manner; so that when John Knox became minister of Edinburgh, in 1560, the Magistrates and Council were under the necessity of providing him accommodation, in the dwelling-house at the Netherbow which still retains his name, and which has recently undergone the process of restoration. Chisholme probably belonged to the Cromlix family, but no certain information regarding his history has been discovered. A fac-simile of his signature may be added, as it occurs in the lease of his dwelling-house, which he granted to David Lord Drummond, and Lilias Ruthven, his second wife, at Stobhall, 2d of July 1566, for the annualrent of five marks, reserving to himself or the provost and curate of the church a bed-chamber within the said dwelling-house, when he should happen to be resident.[1]



Before alluding to the changes which took place at the period of the Reformation, a few notices of a miscellaneous nature, in connexion with St. Giles's Church, may be selected. In the first volume of the Council Regis- ter, among "Certane auld Statutis collectit furth of the revin (torn) auld bukis of the Toun of Edinburgh," several entries occur, imposing fines for breaking the Statutes, one-half or two-thirds of such fines being appropriated to "the Kirk wark of St. Giles." Some of these statutes were applicable to the freighting of vessels to Flanders, others to the grinding of meal at the common mills, and the buying and selling wines at fixed prices. The freemen of the various crafts, upon their admission, were liable to a tax, which was appropriated to the same purpose. It is not less worthy of notice that when King James the Third, in 1482, granted the office of sheriffs of the borough of Edinburgh to the Provost, Bailies, Council, and Community, he bound them to apply a portion of the profits accruing from the office to the celebration of the services in St. Giles.[1] Other penalties applied to "the Kirk wark" are more singular. On the 7th of November 1485, it was enacted that none of the common rents be set to "ony man of Leith;" and that no one shall have "in his service ony persoun dwelland in Leith," under the penalty of £10 to the Kirk wark, and the loss of his freedom for a year and a day.[2] In 1520, William Forsyth was fined £5 "for selling of his wyne opinlie in the tavernis of Leith." In 1522, two persons were to have their effects distrained by the town's officers for "selling of their wyne for xiid. the pynt," the half of the sum to be applied to Sanct Gelis wark, the other half to St. Anthon's altar. In August 1498, as a security for preventing the frequent disturbances in the streets of Edinburgh, which usually ended in bloodshed and murder, both merchants and craftsmen were enjoined to have in their booths "defensabill geir, sik as jak, sellet, burgandynis, gluifis of plait, and ane hand-ax or sword;" and to be in readiness, when the alarm was given, to meet the provost, bailies, and quartermasters, for repressing such tumults, under the penalty of £20 "to the Kirk wark;" and the person who was not of substance to pay this fine, was "to be set on the goif, and thair haldin three dayis, and the caus of his goving descrivit in writt besyde him, and thairafter baneist the town and boundis thairof." This seems rather a harsh penalty incurred by poverty. On the 4th of January 1511-12, John Rynde, prebendary of Railston, with the consent of the provost, bailies, &c., gave a lease of the quarry of Railston, or Ravelston, for the yearly sum of three pounds and a cow's grass, the tenant binding himself to furnish stones for the Kirk wark, and to the neighbours of the town, at the old prices. This quarry, about a mile to the north-west of Edinburgh, is supposed to have formed part of the extensive freestone quarries of Ravelston on Corstorphine hill, and to have furnished the stones with which the public buildings in the city continued to be erected, including the Parliament House and Heriot's Hospital.[1] In March 1541-2, Sir Richard Lawsoun, prebendary, set in feu to Alexander Scott, son of Walter Scott, the lands of Grottell, also in the vicinity of Edinburgh, for three marks yearly. In July 1540, James Prestoun conveyed to the town his house and land at the east entry of their College kirk of St. Geill; and at the same time the occupiers of the booths pertaining to the town were made liable for the feu-duties of their booths for the period of five years, "to the effect that with the samyn James Person's [Prestoun's] land at the east end of the kirk may be bought, and make an entres to the kirk for the honour of God and policie of the gude town." In October 1543, John Watsoun, "glassinwricht," for the annual sum of six marks, undertook, during his lifetime, to uphold the whole glass and windows of the kirk, and to furnish glass, lead, and tin; the Dean of Guild engaging to provide iron, scaffolding, and ladders, when such were required.

In January 1552-3, James Lauder, prebendary of their choir, obtained a licence "to pas furth of the realme to the partes of England and France, thair to remane for the space of ane yeir nixt efter the dait heirof, to the effect that he may have and get better erudition in Musik and Playing nor he hes; providing always that the said James caus an chaiplane to keip his foundatioun of Sanct Katharynis alter be ane preist quhill the said yeir be done." In July 1554, Andro Mansioun "wrycht to the bigging of the stallis of the queir, having done his uter devoir and diligence therein," the provost, bailies, and counsale, and deacons of crafts, were so much satisfied with the manner of completing his task, that they awarded him an annual pension of ten marks for a period of ten years. On the 12th of April 1559, Mansioun of his own free will resigned this pension which he had "in reward of his labours upon the stallis of the queir." Three months later, it was found necessary for the safe custody of the stalls to have them removed to the Tolbooth. But without dwelling on such matters, however curious the detail may be, it is of more importance to allude to the changes in which St. Giles's Church was involved by the great movement known as The Reformation.

The people of Scotland had, for nearly thirty years, been gradually preparing for such a momentous event, and for extirpating from the land all objects of idolatry. The frequent spectacle of persons committed to the flames on the Castle Hill of Edinburgh, and in other places, on the charge of heresy, instead of repressing, only excited the sympathy and prompted the inquiries of the spectators. In regard to Edinburgh, it had long been customary on the 1st of September to celebrate the anniversary of the tutelar saint, by a public procession through the streets; and a figure of St. Giles carved in wood, the size of life, and mounted on priests' shoulders, had hitherto formed a conspicuous object. In the year 1558, notwithstanding the prevalence of the Reformed opinions among the citizens, it was resolved to celebrate this festival with more than ordinary solemnity, but which, in less troublous times, might have assumed the character of an auto da fé; and several heretics, it is said, were reserved for this occasion, to bear faggots and perform public penance, while the Queen-Regent was to countenance the procession with her presence. But before the anniversary arrived, Knox states that "the images were stollen away in all parts of the country; and in Edinburgh was that great idolle called Sanct Gile, first drowned in the North Loch, and after burnt, which," he adds, "raised no small trouble at the time." This trouble refers to an injunction of the Archbishop of St. Andrews either to recover the old Sanct Geill, or to replace this "great idoll" with another, under the penalty of his great cursing. The magistrates of the city thought such a charge to be unjust, and desired that prelate to find a warrant in Scripture for setting up images; and "because they obeyed him not, he caused his curate, Tod,[1] to curse them as black as coal; from the which they appealed to his unholy father the Pope."[2] It would occupy too much space to refer further to this Appellation; but matters of greater importance intervening, "this affair passed in oblivion."[3] Knox has given a detailed account of the tumult on the day of the procession.

It may here be noticed, that the earliest existing accounts of the Dean of Guild show that some emoluments were derived from the Church of St. Giles. The following table exhibits the sums received during six years prior to the Reformation; and shows what trifling offerings were then brought to the shrine of the patron saint:—

On the 12th of July, the stalls of the queir or choir, were directed to be removed to the Nether Tolbooth for their preservation; and on the 29th, a meeting took place between the Queen's Commissioners and a deputation from the Lords of the Congregation, at which the latter asserted their rights to "the Hie Kirk of this Town, callit Sanct Geillis Kirk."[3]

In November 1559, the affairs of the Congregation were so changed, that they departed hastily from Edinburgh, and the French auxiliary troops having taken possession of the city, the Romish worship was restored, and St. Giles's Church was consecrated anew by the Bishop of Amiens.[4] But this state of things was not of long continuance. In the month of March following, Archibald Douglas of Kilspindie, Provost, and the Council ordained the Dean of Guild "to reparrel the Kirk, to lay the throuchis (grave-stones) thairof of new, and sparge (whitewash) the same, and to mend the windows, and to make convenient seats in the church."[5] In the previous month, the annual rents due to certain prebendaries were ordered to be paid; but discharged any future payments to others of their number "because they have not awaited upon the divine service."[6] In the Dean of Guild's disbursements, in May or June 1560, we have this entry: "Item, to ten warkmen quha wrocht be the space of nyne dayis, for takin doun of the haill Altaris of the Kirk, of the Rude loft, (and) for bering of the red

On the 8th of May, understanding that the kirk might be served with three bells, the Council ordered the fourth, called the Mary bell, to be taken down; and on the 26th, this bell and the brazen pillars were appointed to be converted into artillery for the town's use, and, if need be, licence given to send them for this purpose to Flanders.[1] This intention had not, however, been carried into effect, as in October following, the bell called the Mary bell, with the whole brazen pillars, and other brass work that pertained to the kirk were sold to Adam Fullarton, in respect he had been the highest bidder after they had several times been put to "roup" through the town.[2] The sum received for these articles was twelve score pounds.[3]

The silver work, jewels, and other ornaments belonging to the church had previously been disposed of, in conformity to the following minutes of the Town Council:—

An extract from the Dean of Guild's Accounts, showing the proceeds of the sale, may also be subjoined:—

"1560. Oct. 1st week.—Compt of James Barroun, Dene of Gild of the Brugh of Edinburch, in the yeir of God I^M v^c and thre score yeris.]

"In primis, The comptar charges him with the jowellis of the kirk, viz., the Item, The compter chargis him with ane dyamant stene quhilk wes in the ring on the fingar of the forsaid Arme of St. Geill, sauld to Michael Gilbert for ix lb. vi s. viii d." (£9, 6s. 8d.)

It might have been interesting to ascertain the fate of this precious relic, when removed from its silver shrine, and despoiled of its gold ring set with a diamond; but "the Arm-bane of Sanct Geill" had apparently lost all value in the eyes of the Reformed Council, and produced no sum to be entered in the Town's Accounts. At a later period, on the 24th of June 1562, "the prouest, baillies, and counsale ordanis the idole Sanct Geyll to be cuttit furth of the Townys standert and the thrissil put in place thairof; and that the Thesaurer furnis taffate to the samyn, quhilk salbe allowit in his comptis."

The following extract states the sums realized by the sale of other silver and brass work which belonged to the Collegiate Church:—

(£280, 11s. 6d.)

The great religious question having been determined in August 1560, when the Scottish Parliament sanctioned the Presbyterian forms of discipline and church government, "all claim and title to altars and revenues in the kirk" were discharged, and regulations prescribed for the accommodation of the inhabitants. St. Giles's Church having thus been stripped of its sculptured images and decorations, and the numerous altars removed, a portion of it continued to be used for public worship by the community, John Knox being sole minister of Edinburgh, with the assistance of a reader.

In February 1560-1, the Council ordered the Dean of Guild, with all diligence, to complete the stone gable at the west end of Sanct Gelis Kirk, and other necessary work within the said kirk. This may probably account for the disappearance of any traces of the great western door. In March 1568, he was directed "to beit and mend the great window of the east gable of the kirk, and the window in Sanct Thomas Aisle;" "the great wyndois of Sanct Gelis Kirk, having been blawin down, and the maist part of the rufe tyrvit (uncovered) be the last greit wynd, swa that the pepill sall nocht convene thairintill at preching and prayer."

But the Church of St. Giles suffered not only from such accidents, as well as from the over-zeal of the early reformers, but also from the effects of civil contention, when Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange and Queen Mary's adherents retained possession of the Castle. On the 28th of March 1571, Kirkaldy took forcible possession of St. Giles's Church, and placed some of his men in the steeple to keep the citizens in awe. On the 4th of June, "the men of weir in the steipill slappit all the pendis of the kirk for keeping thairof aganis my Lord Regent;" and on the 20th, "there was placed in the steiple of Edinburgh thre peices of brasin ordinance, with victuallis and uthers necessaris for defending of the samyne." Calderwood repeats the same statement, that the rebels of the Castle began, on the 2d of May 1571, to fortify the town, and, on the same day, "to make holes in the vaute of the Great

Kirk of Edinburgh, which they made like a riddell, to shoot thorough at suche as they pleased within the kirk, or at such as would prease to breake doun the pillers."[1] This state of affairs was partly terminated on the 27th of July 1572, when "the haill artillery in Edinburgh, about the walls, on the steipill-head of Sanct Geill, and Kirk of Field, war tane to the Castle of Edinburgh."[2]

Towards the closing period of the Reformer's life, on returning to Edinburgh on the last day of August 1572, he preached "in the Great Kirk: but because his voice was become weaker, he desired another place to teache in, if it were but to an hundreth persons; which was granted."[3] For this purpose a portion of the church was enclosed as a separate place of worship. He died on the 24th of the ensuing November, and was interred in the common burying-ground at the south side of St. Giles's Church, in the presence of the Regent Earl of Morton, the rest of the nobility, and a great concourse of people. Like his great coadjutor Calvin, at Geneva, no stone or memorial appears to have been erected to mark the place of his interment; but there is reason to believe it was nearly in a line with the entrance to the south transept, a little to the west of the base of Charles the Second's equestrian statue, in the Parliament Close. In such a site a statue of the great Reformer would have been much more appropriate. Three years previously, the Regent Earl of Murray, amidst general lamentations at his untimely fate, was buried within the church, and a monument was erected to his memory at the public expense. In restoring the church, it might have been thought that such a monument would have escaped any sacrilegious hand; but to the disgrace of our civic authorities, it was allowed to be demolished, and the brass tablet, containing engraved figures of Justice and Faith, with an inscription written by Buchanan, was removed.[4] The monument itself cannot now be replaced, but it may be hoped that this monumental brass, one of the few existing specimens in Scotland, will yet, as it unquestionably ought, be replaced in the wall of the south transept.

[4] Having succeeded in transferring to stone an impression of the original brass, I was enabled to obtain a sufficient number of copies to gratify some Antiquarian friends; and a reduced facsimile of this interesting historical memorial is given in the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, vol. i. p. 196.

The mortuary chapel connected with the cemetery already alluded to, was demolished in the year 1561.[1] In the following year[2] Queen Mary had conveyed, by a grant, the grounds of the Greyfriars to the Town of Edinburgh, for the purpose of a burial-place; the Magistrates, in their supplication, having solicited that "Youre Hieness will gif to ws the yairdis of the Grayfrieris and situatioun thairof, being sumquhat distant from oure Toune, to mak ane buriale place of, to burie and eird the personis deceissand theirin, sua that thairthrow the air within oure said toune may be the mair pure and clene." On the same day, the Council ordained "Edward alias Sir Edward Hendersoun to tak cure and charge over the warkis of the toune at St. Geillis kirkyaird, the Blak, and Gray Frieris; and ordainis to gyve him 2 shillings on the day for his labouris, induring thair willis." The erection of the Parliament House in 1631 was obviously the means of obliterating the public burying-ground round the church; but the mass of human bones found in its immediate proximity during the process of renovation bore ample testimony of its previous existence. "By my own observation," says John Weever, in his Ancient Funeral Monuments, first published in 1631, "in the famous maiden city of Edinburgh, and in the parish churches of other towns, the sepulchres of the dead are shamefully abused, or QUITE TAKEN AWAY; yea, and the churches themselves, with religious houses and other holy places, violated, demolished, or defaced."[3]

Near the north-east corner of the outer wall of the church there has been replaced a stone with the combined shields of Napier of Merchiston and Napier of Wright's Houses. This stone apparently belongs to the early part of the sixteenth century, and has the following inscription[4]:—

bable, that should the pews and flooring of the High Church ever be removed, there might be discovered some unexplored vaults or a crypt which escaped desecration during the course of the successive changes which were made in transforming if not disfiguring this portion of the church.

It had long been the practice to stipulate the repayment of certain sums for the redemption of lands, upon the high altar of the principal church of the parish, between the rising and setting of the sun. Many instances of this practice might be quoted from old deeds; but it may be sufficient to refer to two, in which the Church of St. Giles is specially mentioned in the years 1452[1] and 1543.[2] After the altars had been destroyed, the same custom of discharging any mutual contracts within the walls of the church still continued. Even so late as the year 1715, Sir Walter Scott mentions a deed by Lord Sinclair, "setting forth, that although the fee of the estate of Ravenscraig was settled upon his son John, Master of Sinclair, yet that the said fee was redeemable upon the granter making payment of a rose noble, or four pounds Scots money, within St. Geill's Church in Edinburgh, at the Earl of Murray's tomb."[3] This part of the church, being the transept, must have remained open during the day, as appears from the various allusions to the Regent's tomb as a place of resort. A Popish writer, Father Alexander Baillie, of the order of St. Benedict, in 1628, has two chapters, "Of the Fruits of Knox his Evangel, the Douncasting of Churches," and "Of the Lamentable Profanation of St. Giles, &c.," in which he says, that this "our politician apostle and apostate Knox, . . . provoked the furious people by his own sacrilegious example to the spoiling and douncasting of churches, overthrowing of altars and organs, breaking of images, chalices, chandlers, basines, lauers, and whatsomever was made of gold or silver, apperteaning to the use of the Altare and sacrifice of the Masse; which he and his comrads turned al to profane and unhallowed uses; . . . therin; bot also for that it was the Burial-place of our Kings and their royal children." This author seems not to have been aware of the state in which the Abbey of Holyrood had been left by the English army in 1547. He also asserts that sheep-houses were made of St. Antone and St. Leonard's Chapels; and after expatiating "upon the deplorable state of the defaced and staggering steeples, the battered wals, broken doune pillars, and the floore al overgrowne with grasse and defiled with filth," of the once royal, brave, and gorgeous church of Aberbrothoc, he says, "Bot leaving it thus wasted and deplored, I wil turn me, and take a view of St. Giles." Comparing it to the desolation of the Temple, he remarks, "If our Saviour Christ, when he came into the Temple of Jerusalem, did cast out al these who were buying and selling in it, and so heavily complained against them, that He sayd: 'It is written, my house sal be called a house of prayer, but yee have made it a den of theeves;' how, I pray you, wold he say, if he were now entring in at S. Giles, and looking to bare wals and pillars al cled with dust, sweepings, and cobwebs, instead of painting and tapestrie; and on every side beholding the restless resorting of people treating of their worldly effaires; some writing and making obligations, contracts, and discharges; others laying countes or telling over soumes of money; and two and two walking and talking to and fro, some about merchandice or the lawes, and too many, allas, about drinking and courting of women, yea, and perhaps about worse nor I can imagine, as is wont to be done al the day long in the common Exchanges of London and Amsterdam, and other great cities; And turning him farther towards the west end of the church, which is devided in a high house for the Colledge of Justice, called the Session or Senathouse and a low house, called the Low Tolbooth, where the Bailiues of the Toune use to sit, and judge common actions and pleas in the one end thereof, and a number of harlots and scolds for flyting and whoredome inclosed in the other; And there, I meane, if our Saviour were present to behold such abominable desolation, that where alters were erected, and sacrifices with continual praises and praiers were wont to be offered up to the Lord, in remembrance of that bloody sacrifice of Christ on the crosse, there now ar holes for whores, and cages for scolds, . . . how heavily wold He complaine, that they have made his house not only a denne of theeves, bot a dungeon of devils; and wold weep upon Edinburgh, as he did on Jerusalem, saying," &c.[1]

There was much truth in this statement, as might be shown from the Council Registers. It would, however, be in vain to aim at pointing out all the internal changes made in this church during the two following centuries. In 1580, the city had three ministers, and some years later a fourth was added. But the Presbytery, or ministers of Edinburgh, deemed it advisable that the town should be subdivided into Parishes; and in April 1595, the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale appointed some of their brethren "to travel with the said Kirk and Council of Edinburgh, that the congregation thereof may be divided in several flocks, that every pastor may know their own flock." This scheme was at last successful, and the town was divided into four quarters or parishes. A subsequent proposal to increase this division to eight parishes[2] was not sanctioned; but on the 18th of April 1598, four additional ministers were chosen, two for each quarter, and the following arrangements made, by which the parishioners of the north-east quarter resorted to the (Trinity) College Kirk; of the south-east, to the Great Kirk of St. Giles; of the south-west, to the Upper Tolbooth; and of the north-east quarter, to the East or Little Kirk.[3] Some disputes arose regarding the latter Kirk; but on the 1st of August 1599, the King and Privy Council gave permission to the Provost, Bailies and Counsell of Edinburgh "to demolishe the wall biggit betwixt the East kirk and the Mid kirk of Sanct Geillis, and to take in a piller of the same Mid kirk and adjoyne the same to the East kirk, that it may be the mair able to hald the haill parochynaris of that quarter;"[4] the former arrangements of the two churches to be restored when it shall please his Majesty, upon ten days' intimation. Calderwood states, that the East Kirk was thus enlarged about the beginning of April 1600.[5] According to

Row,[1] Edinburgh, in 1630, had four churches, with eight ministers: those churches were the South-West or Grayfriars' kirk, the Great Kirk or St. Geillis kirk, the Little Kirk of St. Geilis or the Easter kirk, and the North-East or College kirk. Charles the First, in his zeal for Episcopacy, erected Edinburgh into a See on the 29th of September 1633, and by a royal letter, dated the 11th of October, directed the Council to have St. Giles converted into a Cathedral Church, "according to the first intention of the erectors and founders thairof," by the removal of various walls and partitions.[2] In the further prosecution of this design, on the 10th of February 1636, James Hanna, Dean of St. Giles, was ordered to repair to Durham, "to take a draught (or plan) of the Choir of the Cathedral Church in that city, in order to fit up and beautify the inside of St. Giles's Church after the same manner."[3] The tumult which took place within its walls upon the first reading of the English service, and subsequent events, restored the church for Presbyterian worship. Dr. William Forbes was the first Bishop of Edinburgh, but, unlike his namesake, the first Provost of this Collegiate Church, he did not long enjoy his Episcopal preferment. His patent is dated on the 2d of January 1634, and he died on the 1st of April following. His successor, David Lindesay, was translated from Brechin in 1634, but was deposed by the General Assembly at Glasgow in 1638. In December 1656, the East Kirk of St. Giles, according to Nicoll, being again divided, the eastmost kirk of the two was first completed, and then occupied. But within four years further changes were made, for the same contemporary authority says,[4] "This yeir 1660, the twa eistmest kirkes of Edinburgh nerrest the great old kirk of St. Geill, were alterit; the stane werk and devisioun betwixt thame wer alterit and takin doun, with thair loftis and haill frame, and these two kirkis, being formerlie twa kirkes, wer now erectit in one kirk; the Kingis saitt placed thairin, dasses, saittes, and loftis inlairged for ease of his Majesteis Commissioner, and of the nobles and utheris of the Parliament now convenit to be haldin the first day of Januar nixt." After the Restoration, Episcopacy being again introduced, George Wishart, the historian of Montrose's Wars, was appointed Bishop of Edinburgh in 1662. He died in 1671, and was succeeded by Alexander Young, who was translated to Ross in 1679, to make room for John Paterson, who became Archbishop of Glasgow in 1687. Alexander Rose, the last of this race of Prelates, was ejected at the Revolution in 1688. Father Augustine Hay says, "Whilst I was young, St Giles was divided into three, viz., the New Church, whereof the first minister was named Dean, the Old Church, and the Tolbooth Church. Since the Prince of Orange mastered Scotland, there is a new division; the fourth part is called the North Church."[1] This fourth church was commonly known as the Little Kirk, or Haddo's Hole, and formed the north-west division of the building.

The remarks which have incidentally been made, might suggest the conclusion that the internal changes had destroyed the original design and proportions of St. Giles's Church. The building of parapet walls, and the removal of others, with the numerous subdivisions, no doubt prevented the form of the building from being easily recognised; still its mediæval character was not destroyed, and it only remained for an architect skilled in Gothic architecture, and embued with true taste and feeling, to render such a building worthy of the metropolis of Scotland. Mr. Rickman, who was at least free from all local prejudices or feelings, and was familiar with the finest remains of English ecclesiastical architecture, in his notice of St. Giles, says, "The exterior appearance of the church is much deteriorated by its windows being despoiled of tracery, the destruction of battlements, parapets, and pinnacles, and various modern alterations, but it is in contemplation to restore it, and of this it is very capable, as the substantial part of the building is not much injured, and if the interior divisions were cleared, it would make one or even two very fine churches."[2] On the ground-plan, it would not be difficult to point out that in its arrangements the proper rules of geometrical construction had been rigidly followed,[1] thus admitting the successive enlargements of the transept and chancel, and the addition of side aisles and chapels in conformity with such rules.[2] In connexion with the ground-plan inserted at the close of these Notices, the following description given by Arnot in the year 1779,[3] may be quoted, as it shows the several purposes to which the building was appropriated.

"THE CHURCH OF ST. GILES is a beautiful Gothick building, in length from east to west, on the outside of the wall, two hundred and six feet. Its breadth, at the west end, is one hundred and ten feet, in the middle, a hundred and twenty-nine feet, but at the east end, only seventy-six. It is adorned with a lofty square tower, the top of which is encircled with open figured stone work, resembling the ornaments that enrich the circlet of an imperial crown. From each side and each corner of the tower, rises a slip of stone-work, which, meeting in the top with that which springs from the opposite side forms four arches intersecting each other, and compleating the figure of an imperial crown, the top of which terminates in a pointed spire. The church is built on a very elevated situation, and the height of the spire is a hundred and sixty-one feet.

"At the Reformation, this Church was, for the greater commodiousness, divided by partition-walls. The four principal apartments are allotted for divine worship; the lesser ones to other purposes. The chief of these divisions is called the New Church. It is formed out of the choir of St. Giles's. In it are the King's seat, those of the Lord Provost and Magistrates, and of the Judges of the Court of Session, this being the principal church in the city.

THE OLD CHURCH.

"The central part of St. Giles is fitted up as a place of worship, for the accommodation of the citizens, and called the Old Church.

THE TOLBOOTH CHURCH.

"Upon the Reformation, the Presbyterians conceived an immoderate aversion at bestowing the names of any of the saints upon their churches; but distinguished them by some circumstance respecting the time or manner of erection, of vicinity, &c. This church accordingly, which occupies the south-west quarter of St. Giles's, from its vicinity to the prison-house, was termed the Tolbooth Church.

[1] See Hawkins's Gothic Architecture, p. 157.

[2] For pointing out the above fact, I am indebted to Mr. Andrew Kerr of H.M. Board of Works, whose extensive practical knowledge in such matters is well known, and his readiness to communicate information on matters of antiquarian research.

[3] Arnot's History of Edinburgh, p. 270. Edinb., 1779, republished 1788, 4to.

HADDOW'S-HOLE CHURCH.

"This occupies the north-west part of St. Giles's. It was not fitted up as a place of worship till A.D. 1699. It takes the name of Haddow's-hole, from its having been made a prison, in which a gentleman of the name of Haddow was long confined.

"Besides these churches, the smaller apartments in this cathedral are appropriated to several purposes. The chief of them is fitted up for the General Assembly. A throne is erected in it for his Majesty's Commissioner. The Convention of Royal Burghs is also held in this apartment. In other parts of this church, the City Clerks of Edinburgh, and the Kirk-Session Clerks, have their offices; and one of the rooms is used as the city-cartulary [charter room] of Edinburgh."

Several external changes or repairs had been made on the walls, doors, and windows, prior to the close of the last century. The most important change was probably that which took place in the year 1560, by converting the western portion of the church, with some additions, into a Tolbooth or Court of Justice, and the eastern portion into a School.[1] But want of space prevents any further notice being taken of subsequent repairs and alterations, except to state that in the year 1648, the steeple required also to be in part rebuilt.[2] In all the changes, however, which the building underwent during a period of more than six centuries, the old Norman doorway on the north remained entire. From the Council Records, 30th July 1760, we find it was represented "that the walls of the church commonly called Haddo's Hole were very hungrie, and ought to be pointed;" and this was authorized to be done without loss of time, in "the most frugal manner." In the following year some other necessary improvements were in progress, according to a plan exhibited to the Council, and these were directed to be done, still in "the most frugal manner." But it seems to have been in the year 1798, when some alterations were made upon the vestry of Haddo's Hole or New North Church, that the original Norman doorway fell a sacrifice to that indifference to what was venerable for its antiquity, which then unhappily prevailed.

It might be out of place to describe the various buildings which surrounded St. Giles's Church as they appeared in the earlier part of the present century, before the demon-spirit of improvement had taken possession of the inhabitants of Edinburgh.[1] There is not perhaps a city in Europe, that has been so singularly unfortunate in having its most venerable public buildings ruined or destroyed, and its picturesque old houses swept away, in the course of modern improvements. The first false step consisted in changing the external character of the Parliament House, erected in the reign of Charles the First. This building was commenced in 1631, and completed in 1640, at an expense of £11,600 sterling. "No one," says Lord Cockburn, "who remembers the old exterior, can see the new one without sorrow and indignation."[2] But while the High Street was improved by the gradual removal of the Luckenbooths, or pile of buildings to the north of the church, and of the Old Tolbooth or Jail, immortalized as the "Heart of Mid-Lothian," and by the demolition of the houses in Forrester's Wynd, and other tenements on the west, including the Council Chambers and the Goldsmiths Hall, as well as the numerous booths or shops erected between the buttresses, both on the south and north sides of the church, the building itself, having escaped the great fires of 1824, remained, it is true, a somewhat unsightly object, but capable, in competent hands, of any improvement.

In the year 1817 or 1818, when plans for the restoration of this Church by Mr. Archibald Elliot, architect, were prepared, and exhibited by the Town Council, it was objected, that this was "an original building in the school of Mr. Elliot, not a renovation of the ancient building, and that the regularity of the plan gave it too much the character of an enlarged modern chapel." From the notices given of these plans, it is evident that all the most objectionable parts are slavishly copied in the actual renovation which took place ten or twelve years later. His plans,[3] although they bore no

[1] Having for several years, at an early period of life, sat in the Tolbooth Church during the incumbency of its two worthy ministers, Dr. Davidson and Dr. Campbell, I may well remember not only the interior, but the access to the church by the southern porch, after passing through the covered passage which led into the Parliament Close from the west. The church itself, it will be seen from the ground plan, consisted of the three westmost chapels erected in the year 1387, enlarged with a portion of the southern aisle of the original nave.

[2] Lord Cockburn's Memorials, p. 106. He there makes some remarks on the total want of taste which prevailed at this period: the building itself, he says, "might have been painted scarlet, without anybody objecting."

[3] Some judicious observations on these plans appeared in an article affectedly styled a "Report of the Committee of Dilettanti," in Blackwood's Magazine for July 1818, vol. iii. p. 408. See also the Edinburgh Magazine for November 1817, and June 1818, p. 538. But no regard was paid to these anonymous recommendations.

resemblance to the ancient edifice, consisted at least of the most simple and appropriate mode of division of the building into an East and West Church, with the transept as a great hall for the meetings of the General Assembly. When the church was remodelled, the Preston Aisle was assigned for this purpose, but it proved so unsuitable, that it had to be abandoned, and converted into a church, for which it was not much better adapted. It cannot therefore cease to be a matter of deep and unavailing regret, that when in 1829 it was resolved to improve St. Giles, the architect had not been expressly restricted to lopping off all modern excrescences, and to such restorations as might be required, in conformity to the original style of the building. But the genius of the architect was not to be trammelled with preserving what remained of the stone traceries of old windows, or carved niches and canopies, or antique turrets; while aisles or chapels with lofty vaulted ceilings, ornamented bosses, and groined ribs, however imposing, were by no means so convenient as they would be when separated into an upper and under apartment, for holding heating apparatus and for other purposes; and deep, recessed porches, with rich groinings, although highly picturesque, were not to be compared with the three doorways, or principal entrances, all of one pattern, on which large windows might be supported. It might otherwise, at a comparatively moderate expense, have been converted into one principal church, and an Assembly Hall, and have preserved our venerable Collegiate Church to the delight of many generations as one of the finest objects in Edinburgh. Instead however of directing its restoration, as formerly, in "the most frugal manner," in addition to what the city funds could advance, Government was, unluckily, induced to contribute the sum of £12,600 in order to have the building renovated in the most approved and fashionable style of modern Gothic architecture;[1] and OUR ANCIENT VENERABLE CHURCH WAS RENOVATED WITH A VENGEANCE. Not a single ancient monument now exists within the walls; all the beautiful details and decorations were disregarded; and, externally, with the exception of the steeple, it may be said that not one stone, or window, of the old edifice was allowed to remain. When Rickman therefore says, "There are several ancient monuments in this church,"[1] it may be asked, What became of them? In short, although a parish or collegiate church can never be compared with a great cathedral erected during the best times of Gothic architecture, it is no improbable supposition, that had St. Mungo's Cathedral in the west been renovated on the same principle, Glasgow might now have had plaster and whitewash instead of stone, the floor reduced to one level, the Lady Chapel removed as an incumbrance, the glorious Crypt, as, strange to say, it was in our own days, again filled with earth, and the Nave disfigured with pews and galleries. In some other locality, the Church of St. Giles, as it now exists, might have been ornamental; but it is no longer the historical church where Knox preached, where the General Assemblies from the period of the Reformation had usually held their meetings, in which so many stirring events were transacted, and in and around which the mortal remains of our most distinguished citizens, and of many generations, had been deposited. An eloquent modern writer, in allusion to such restorations, says, "By the exertion of great national powers, and under the guidance of enlightened monarchs, we may raise magnificent temples and gorgeous cities; we may furnish labour for the idle, and interest for the ignorant. But the power neither of emperors, nor queens, nor kingdoms, can ever print again upon the sands of time the effaced footsteps of departed generations, or gather together from the dust the stones which had been stamped with the spirit of our ancestors."[2]

Previously to this remodelling of the church, begun in 1829 and ended in 1833, careful plans and elevations had been executed by direction of the Barons of Exchequer. These plans, drawn by the late Mr. John Chalmers, are deposited in the Office of H.M. Board of Works; and by the kindness of Robert Matheson, Esq., accurate copies on a reduced scale have been made for the present volume, in order to preserve some record of the original edifice. The church had latterly been subdivided into four places of public worship, besides the City Clerk's chambers, and the old Police Office. The references on the ground-plan are added to point out these several divisions. We could have wished that some pains had been taken to preserve accurate views of the southern porch, the monuments, and other interesting objects which do not now exist; with the exception of the round arch of this porch, which is now rebuilt between the south pillars of the centre tower, as the entrance to the Old Church. South St. Giles's Church, so inappropriately called The Old Church, is formed of the south transept connected with parts of the Preston Aisle and of the chapels of 1387 which were not demolished. The proper Old Kirk of St. Giles must have been the nave and side aisles to the west of the centre tower, running parallel with the High or New Kirk until it was subdivided, and portions of it appropriated to the three churches marked in the ground-plan with the letters B, C, and D.

I have only further to add, that as an Appendix to these Notices, there are subjoined, 1. Some Charters discovered subsequent to the printing of the text; 2. Extracts from the Chamberlain Rolls, 1389 to 1437; 3. A list of the several Altars erected or endowed within the Church prior to the Reformation; 4. A list of the Prebendaries and other Officials so far as their names have been recovered; and 5. Occasional selections from the Council Records of the City of Edinburgh.

[1] This Charter or Seal of Cause, granted by "the Provost, Baillies, Counsale and Deacons of the hail Craftis," to the Masons and Wrights, forming them into a Corporation, is also dated the 15th of October 1475. The original is preserved among the Records of the Incorporated Trades of St. Mary's Chapel, and contains a reference to the special grant of St. John's Aisle in St. Giles's College Kirk. The above confirmation by Andro, Archbishop of St. Andrews, in 1517, is preserved in the same repository, along with a subsequent confirmation, in 1527-8, by King James the Fifth, of these Charters, including one dated in 1489, relating to persons who had refused to pay their penny weekly for support of the said Altar. See infra, p. lxxxvii.

Carta confirmationis Magiſtris Artificiorum Carpentariorum et Lathamorum Burgi de Edinburgh de ſuis privilegiis.

15 King James V. confirms three charters :

1. Dated 15th Oct. 1475, in which the Town grants to the maſons and wrights "the ile and chapell of Sanct Johne fra the ald hers inwart." [Vide p. lxviii.]

2. Dated 15th Oct. 1475, in which the Provoſt, baillies, council, and deacons of crafts confirm the ſtatutes made by the maſons and wrights.

3. Dated 26th Aug. 1489, in which, on the complaint by the maſters of the couper craft, "that diverſ perſonis of the ſaid craft quhilkis ar and has bene of lang tyme obſtinat and inobedient in obſeruing and keping of gud reull ordinance and ſtatutis maid and ordanit of before . . . . for the wphald
